And this is a short excerpt from that case which many hon. members here will recall.

The judge's remarks now are quoted into this report:

Having said that, I do not wish to be taken as in any way suggesting that I am laying down any principle that limits the rights of employees to strike lawfully, as provided by the governing statutes, nor am I in any way suggesting that I am limiting the right of peaceful picketing, or the right of anyone to communicate information in a peaceful way to others. But that does not mean communicating information in such a manner as to intimidate or threaten others.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with those quotations, I do not think I could do any better myself, with any language that I might have applied or made original or quoted from textbooks.

With that explanation, and with the reference to the select committee's recommendation, this bill has been introduced, and the effect of this bill will be to give at least two days' notice of an injunction.

I think it might interest the House if I just gave hon. members an extract from a typical injunction order so that they will, Mr. Speaker, see the kind of restraining words that are used.

Here is one that I picked out at random, an order that was made in 1951:

This court doth order that the defendants be, and they are hereby restrained, until the trial of this action or other final disposition thereof, from improperly interfering with the employees of the plaintiff by preventing, or attempting to prevent by the use of force, threats, intimidation or coercion, the said employees from entering or leaving the plaintiff's premises at such and such a place, and from intimidating or threatening—and so forth.

Now, that particular type of remedy is only granted by our courts by a supreme court judge, only granted by our courts on evidence that not to grant it would cause irreparable damage to the person applying.

The ex-parte feature of it has the feature that there has been a great deal of controversy about, and a great deal of dispute. I would agree that it is not a good thing to have an application of that sort taken care of ex parte if the other party to it, or parties to it, can be quickly notified and brought before the court, unless there is such a situation of emergency where life and limb or where irreparable and great damage might occur if immediate action was not taken.

Now, the section provides just for that. I think this is a step forward in a better understanding of the problem, perhaps a fairer way of disposing of it, but not in any way interfering with the fundamental right of the court to determine, in the ordinary course, in relation to injunctions for that type of thing.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on the principle of this bill. Regarding the objective of the legislation, I am 100 per cent. in support, in fact so much so that I attempted to get the government to enact similar legislation a year ago rather than now, but to no avail.

However, upon more mature consideration, they have now brought in their bill to deal with the use of ex-parte injunctions in labour disputes. However, Mr. Speaker, I am worried about one aspect of the bill—the means with which the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) proposes that the government should deal with such injunctions.

The problem involved in ex-parte injunctions is that they have been grossly abused. In the first place, the law, the statutes, should never have tolerated the proposition that an injunction could have been given without providing an opportunity for the opposing side to present their case when there was no emergency involved at all, which is, in many cases, the instance in labour relations disputes.

That the law should have permitted that kind of thing, I think, was an intolerable breach of what is generally referred to as British justice, because what simply happened was that the courts heard one side of the case, and rendered a verdict, without even bothering to hear the other side of the case. However, that is met now by this 48-hours' notice to provide the opposite side with an opportunity to come and present their case.

But, Mr. Speaker, the problem lies in the gross abuse by the courts in the definition of emergency. I am not a lawyer and I have not had the experience in the courts but there is case after case of the most normal situations which the courts have deemed to be called an emergency and granted an ex-parte injunction. The worry, it seems to me, that remains as far as this Act is concerned, is that there is nothing in this Act to assure us that this abuse cannot continue to be exercised by the courts.

The third subsection of section 1 reads as follows:

An interim injunction under subsection 2 may be granted ex parte where the court is satisfied that a breach of the peace, injury to the person, or damage to property has occurred or an interruption of essential public services has occurred or is likely to occur.

Now it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that power exists in the criminal code already. If it exists in the criminal code already, why does it have to be put in here—with particular reference to labour relations or unions being involved in it?

It seems to me we can keep this clear-cut, that ex-parte injunctions are out the window as far as labour relations are concerned, so that there is not provided the weapon or the opportunity for courts to abuse it in the fashion in which it has been done in the past. If anyone wants to take action because of the threat to the peace or injury to persons or damage to property, then let them take action in the appropriate and in the normal way through the criminal code.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that while the objectives of this bill are highly commendable, the means that are being adopted are not going to remove the possibility for continued abuse such as we have seen in the past.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I would not think the hon. member would prefer to have people arrested and put in jail in preference to having them restrained by a civil order.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, ORDINARY EXPENDITURE

On vote 417:

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, in saying a word about the supplementary estimates, it will be noted that the amount proposed to be granted this year is less than last year. Several of the same items appear.

I would like to mention particularly the special grants to public hospitals under the authority of The Public Hospitals Act and the regulations thereunder, which will be an amount equal to $150 for each bed, but will be apportioned to the various hospitals on the basis of $75 per bed to all hospitals. The remainder, or an amount equal to $75 per bed, will be granted to certain hospitals who find themselves in the position of needing financial aid rather badly.

This has come about because of the change in the administration of hospitals as a result of the hospital services plan. Formerly, public hospitals set rates of variable amounts between public ward service and semi-private and private bed service. The hospitals also had the opportunity of charging the patient for drugs used, and were able in some instances to make a profit upon those sales.

Under the present plan, since the hospital services commission have taken over, that of course is included in the service that is given to the patient and the hospital is not able to make a profit on that operation. It is because of this change that an extra grant of $5 million is made to the various hospitals throughout the province.

The reason for having it in the supplementary estimates is that this is considered temporary. It is expected that eventually all hospitals will be on a sound financial basis.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): And depreciation will be recognized.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes. We have, as hon. members know, urged the federal government to recognize the depreciation or depletion.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, with our influence they very probably will.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Well, why does the hon. Prime Minister not get the $100 million with his influence?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We may get that, too.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Prime Minister may get it. Two years ago he promised it. Now he says he may.

Hon. Mr. Frost: One thing at a time. We are making great progress.

Mr. Whicher: May and Frost go together.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Who is May? I never met her.

Hon. Mr. Allan: The item of $900,000 in the estimates is a reimbursement—

Hon. Mr. Frost: June is my day.

Hon. Mr. Allan: As I was about to say, the item of $900,000 is an amount that is paid to the hospital services commission for out-of-pocket expenditures, that it has been necessary for them to make, to take care of mental patients who were in certain institutions other than provincial institutions.

The rate is exactly the same as the rate in the provincial institution. Those are the two items that I thought might not be clearly understood.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for an explanation of items Nos. 3 and 4 of vote 417— not an explanation, but the hon. Treasurer said the other day the reason that he put this $1 million in the teachers' superannuation fund, in supplementary estimates instead of the regular budget, was because he had to wait to see what sort of a surplus he had. I suggest he has a surplus every year.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, that is not—

Mr. Whicher: That is what the hon. Prime Minister said. It is in Hansard. That is what he said.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was a misunderstanding.

Mr. Whicher: Does he mean it was a misstatement?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, a misunderstanding.

Mr. Whicher: Oh, a misunderstanding. Well, it was not a misunderstanding on my part, because I read Hansard and that was in there. Why can this not be put in the ordinary budget?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not know how the hon. member did, because it is not published yet.

Mr. Whicher: It is published.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Well, Mr. Chairman, by making these contributions we are guided by the advice of the Provincial Auditor who was appointed by this Legislature to make certain—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): How much money have we got in the teachers' superannuation fund now?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Not a very great deal.

Mr. Nixon: Well, how much?

Hon. Mr. Allan: May I finish this statement?

I would like to read from the Provincial Auditor's report, and he is referring to the

$1 million that was placed in the teachers' superannuation fund and the $1 million placed in the public service superannuation fund:

These special contributions have been continued over a period of several years and are of value to the two funds but must be considered as temporary, pending an actuarial report on the funds.

The actuarial report will be made as from the end of the year 1958. Hon. members recognize that there is a bill before the House changing the date from 1957 to 1958. The reason for that was the change in the mechanics of handling the accounting of the teachers' superannuation fund. Because of installing certain electronic tabulating machines, it was late in the year of 1958 before it was foreseen. It was felt that by delaying the study for only a brief period and by proceeding from the end of 1958, that the study would be more up to date.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I just say in explanation of what my hon. friend has said there, I think it should be made plain here that the receipt of that report, in connection with the actuarial soundness, or otherwise—of not only the public service superannuation fund but the teachers' superannuation fund—would in no way carry with it, expressed or implied, any promise that we would make up any difference in that sum. I want to make that plain. Now, there is a difference of opinion on that point and I will explain it. As a matter of fact, from an actuarial standpoint, both of those funds have been, I would say, in a deficit position for very many years.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Unsound.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well all right, if one wants to put it on the basis of actuarial soundness, or unsoundness, I think perhaps it would be fair to go as far as my hon. friend from Oshawa states.

Now, that is true also of the superannuation funds at Ottawa. Although the federal government, a few years ago, placed a large sum in one of those funds, nevertheless the actuarial soundness of those funds—I mean from that strict standpoint—is still open to question, very serious question.

Now, with both of these funds, I would say that in all probability—and I am only making an estimate of this at the moment—these funds would continue to increase. They are increasing at the present time, and they would continue to increase to about the year 2,000 provided we did not put any more money in. But every $1 million we place in this fund postpones that period. I would say here for anybody around these parts now within the sound of my voice and so on, the year 2,000 is a very considerable period of time away, but in any event, every $1 million we place in there extends that period.

Now, may I say this, that Treasurywise there have been differences of opinion on the importance—and I come to the point raised by my hon. friend from Oshawa—on the importance of the actuarial soundness.

I do not want to bring the learned chief justice of this province into the matter of things political, now that he has gone to that other rarified realm. But hon. Mr. Porter's position was always this, that it is really upon the credit of the province that those funds operate, and that actually the actuarial soundness is not a question of absolute importance in the long run.

At the present time, there is no reason at all, actually, why there should be any contribution from the consolidated revenue fund, but we are making those contributions. Now, I think it is fair to say that hon. Mr. Porter questioned as to whether we should make those contributions, owing to the fact that those funds—both of them—are guaranteed by the province and by the fiscal soundness of the province.

On the other hand, as I say there is the argument from the other side, that if we could place those funds in absolute actuarial sound positions that ultimately—perhaps in the year 2,025—it would relieve some other government from making the funds a direct charge upon the consolidated revenue fund. Now that is about the situation.

Our position has been, one might say, a compromise position from this standpoint, that we have continued to put in $1 million a year. We are not called upon to do it, we do it by supplementary estimates because we recognize that it is a temporary matter. But, if we were in a position where we were not able to do it—well, actually speaking, we might pursue another course. I do not want to create a precedent, but in the days of this government, for many years past, we have been placing that sum in these two funds.

Now, again I say, as I explained to this House before, that is not to be regarded as a precedent. As a matter of fact, we are not called upon to do it. We are making a contribution, from the consolidated revenue fund, to both of those funds, in recognition of the point of view raised by those people who argue for actuarial soundness.

But I do so in full light of this position, that there is an equally strong case on the other side that actuarial soundness is not an absolute requisite. Now, sir, that is the situation and we have taken the position that this money should be placed in the fund under those circumstances.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, we in our group have no objection to the government contributing to the teachers' superannuation fund and to the public service superannuation fund. I think this last 4 or 5 years it has gone on $2 million each year, one to each organization. But the hon. Prime Minister always says he wants to be fair and he likes to look after the little fellow. What are we going to do about the people on superannuation who are getting pensions or workmen's compensation, when they were getting pensions of 50 per cent.? I have in mind one gentleman who lost his hand some years ago, and is getting a pension of about $23 a month. If we can do it for the teachers and the public service, we certainly should for the others also—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to the hon. member that we do not make any contribution to workmen's compensation. On the other hand, we are contributing to this fund about 6 per cent., or whatever the amount is, he understands anyway, so we are partners in the fund.

Mr. Thomas: —if we had to make some contribution out of the consolidated revenue towards the workmen's compensation board to bring these pensions up to where it would be equitable and in conformity with—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is a different story, and has nothing to do with this.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the explanation, and the explanation of the explanation, and I do not really understand what either of them mean, and why these two figures of $1 million are included in the supplementary estimates.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Because they are temporary.

Mr. Singer: Well now, it may be temporary or it may not be temporary. But nothing in the budget that the hon. Provincial Treasurer presented is permanent other than for the year 1960-1961. There are substantial differences in the budget 1959-1960, as compared to 1960-1961, and no one suggests what was done in 1959-1960 has to be repeated in 1960-1961. It can be changed, it can be modified.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We do not have to do what we did.

Mr. Singer: Well then, Mr. Chairman, if this is what the hon. Prime Minister has said, it is really a distinction without a difference. There is no logical reason for this. May I refer the hon. Prime Minister to the Gordon report—it says this process of supplementary estimates are for unusual things, things that are different, things that are extraordinary.

Now, this is not unusual or different or extraordinary, it has been done for 5 or 6 or 8 years. It has been an established policy, and it is up to the government to make up its mind whether it wants to continue them or whether it does not.

If it wants to do it this year, and it knows it is going to do it this year, it should put it in the budget where it belongs, and not in the supplementary estimates.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, let me give the hon. member this point, for instance take next year. It is not in the budget. As a matter of fact, we do not know whether or not we will do it next year. We may not. That is why it is in the supplementary estimates this year.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, if the government does not have any idea this year of how much money it is going to spend for superannuation funds, then perhaps they should get some people in the Treasury benches who do know what they are going to do.

Mr. Whicher: I thought the hon. Provincial Treasurer said the other day that this budget had been prepared a year and a half in advance. Now, surely he knows whether—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Well, the hon. member should have noticed when the year and a half was from.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue what the hon. member for York Centre has made reference to, and that is the fundamental job or purpose of supplementary estimates.

I do think Mr. Gordon, in the Gordon report, was critical of the idea of supplementary estimates, as such. As I recall it, he argued that this Legislature should be supreme, and should vote at the beginning of each fiscal year the funds to be expended.

Now, he did point out that, unlike Ottawa where they are in long session, there is always the opportunity there to vote additional funds if they are required, whereas that is not the case here. Certainly, he made the essential point that no funds should be expended except those that are voted upon.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All the hon. leader of the Opposition needs to do is vote against this if he does not want it, he just—

Mr. Wintermeyer: This is a good explanation on the surface. But, Mr. Chairman, let me point out this is the history of supplementary estimates over the last 6 years. In 1954 we voted $30.85 million; in 1955, $39.319 million; in 1956, $47 million; in 1957, $49 million; in 1958, $57 million; in 1959, $37 million and today's estimate is in the vicinity of $8 million.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is he not better pleased than with that of—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, because, as a result of our request to do away with the highway reserve fund, at least that cushion in the budget has been taken away.

But, Mr. Chairman, whether we like it or not, the simple fact is that this is one of the means the government has at its disposal to provide the cushion necessary to demonstrate a surplus or deficit, as it will at the end of a year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am objecting to it in principle, I am not objecting to the specific items at all, and I want to be very emphatic about that. But in principle this is not good bookkeeping, this is not good accounting.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Who said what is—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr.—yes—

Mr. Rowntree: He remembers it, does he not?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Jolly fellow.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, he is a nice fellow, C. D., a nice fellow.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, the simple fact of the matter is that I am objecting in principle to the idea of supplementary estimates. If we review, for example, even the hospital grants, they vary substantially in the last 3 or 4 years. From 1954 to 1958, it was $200 per bed, and then $150 per bed and now $75 per bed.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): That is because it is a good hospital plan.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That may well be. Now the hon. Minister is making my argument. He is making the very argument that I want to present to this House, and that is that this is not a matter for supplementary estimates. I submit that supplementary estimates, in my humble opinion, be reserved for that extraordinary thing that nobody could anticipate, and surely the hon. Minister of Health is not going to tell me that he could not anticipate the significance of the hospitalization programme.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, we cannot.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister is a very intelligent man, and is probably more knowledgeable on this thing than any of us. But I think he knows better than any one of us that this supplementary estimate over the years has been used to hide surpluses. It has been used for devious purposes, and I object to it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The Opposition says we have never had any surpluses.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, I will have the opportunity, in due course, to go into this. But the simple fact is that sure we have a surplus of ordinary revenue over ordinary expenditures, this year in the amount of about $66 million. Years back it has been far greater, and this government was most anxious to hide a good part of it, and they hid it in the highway reserve fund under these supplementary estimates.

I say that they have abused the principle in the past. They are abusing it now in a lesser degree. The principle is still wrong, and there is no assurance that it will not be abused in the future. And that is what I am objecting to in conjunction with these supplementary estimates.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 515.

Mr. Nixon: Oh no, Mr. Chairman, I asked—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I may say to the hon. members that it is obvious that others want to speak, including the hon. Provincial Treasurer, and I think it would be better if this went over until Monday, and I will explain the business of the House for the next few days when the committee rises.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will proceed with the supplementary estimates, and then these estimates in this order: The Attorney-General's Department, and The Department of Energy Resources. Now, that will be on Monday and Tuesday. In between, there will be bills and budget debate, as we can call it.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.10 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 7, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, students from the following schools: Vaughan Road collegiate institute, Toronto; Oak Park junior high school, Toronto; Blantyre public school, Scarborough.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. H. L. Rowntree, from the standing committee on private bills, presents the committee's seventh and final report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

An Act respecting the town of Arnprior.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act respecting the National Sanitarium Association.

An Act respecting the city of Owen Sound.

An Act respecting the city of London.

An Act respecting the city of Belleville.

An Act respecting the city of Hamilton.

An Act respecting the town of Ajax.

An Act respecting the township of North York.

Your committee would recommend that the fees, less penalties and the actual cost of printing, be remitted on:

An Act respecting the National Sanitarium Association.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I be permitted to remind the hon. members, in case any such reminder may be necessary, that today, March 7, is both the birthday and the 110th anniversary of the birth of a great Czech patriot, philosopher and statesman. I refer, of course, to Tomas G. Masaryk who was born in the year 1850 in that part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire which later became Czechoslovakia.

Perhaps "became" is not the most appropriate word to use, because national changes of this kind do not just occur on their own, but are brought about by years of struggle and suffering, and often by the relentless effort of one individual.

Masaryk campaigned for many years to establish in place of the empire, which has been described as neither holy nor Roman nor even an empire, a number of independent states of which Czechoslovakia was one. And it was appropriate that, in 1918, he was elected the first president of Czechoslovakia.

Masaryk's death in 1937 took place a year before his country was wiped out by Hitler, and a decade before the iron curtain, which today divides his own and other countries from the world of freedom, descended over Europe.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to recount in this House the whole stirring story of the man whose life work and struggle were devoted to the achievement of freedom for his people, and for government of the people, by the people. The year 1960 is being celebrated as Masaryk year by the Czechoslovak association of Canada.

The United States government is, I understand, commemorating this anniversary by issuing a specially designed stamp bearing the imprint "Masaryk, Champion of Liberty."

Many of us here in Canada, and in this House, are descendants of pioneers who sought and found their own brand of liberty far from their homelands in this vast and virgin North American territory. There are many others in Canada, and in Ontario, who much more recently have fled from tyranny elsewhere, and have found their freedom with us.

It appears to me, therefore, that we in this House might well pause for a moment, in the routine of our work, to pay silent tribute to the memory of the great statesman and champion of liberty—Tomas G. Masaryk.

I understand that the hon. member for St. Andrew would also like to pay tribute to this great man.

Mr. A. Crossman (St. Andrew): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the hon. Provincial Secretary in his remarks regarding this occasion.

As he has said, today is the 110th anniversary of the birth of Tomas G. Masaryk, the father and first president of the republic of Czechoslovakia. To mark this date, the year 1960 is being celebrated by the Czechoslovakian democratic organizations in Canada as Masaryk year.

We should all recognize and participate with the Czechoslovakian community in this commemoration of the birth of a "great champion of liberty." As the hon. Minister has stated, the United States is recognizing this event in a number of appropriate ways, one of which is—as he has mentioned—the issue of a special commemorative Masaryk stamp in a series of "great champions of liberty."

Parenthetically, I might state that, as a philatelist, I can tell this House that this is a very fine method of commemorating great occasions and great men, and I urge the Postmaster General of Canada (Mr. Hamilton) to adopt this idea.

Masaryk was one of those rare individuals who refused to be stampeded into complacency, compliance and submission by the reactionary and tyrannical forces of his day and his environment. In spite of his humble birth, Masaryk became a very cultured and courageous philosopher and political leader. He fought for, and finally succeeded in witnessing the foundation of a truly democratic Czechoslovakian republic.

It is of special interest to those who are aware of the anti-semitic superstitions and violence, which were so prevalent at the end of the 19th century and into the 20th—particularly in the area of the world in which Masaryk lived and worked—that he stood up bravely against such uncivilized attacks upon a minority.

Czechoslovakia was, in many respects, a model democratic state surrounded by much feudalism, imperialism and tyranny. Unfortunately, only after 20 short years of its existence, it was prey to the ravages of the Hitler hordes, and the unpreparedness, I might say, of the free world, which did not at the time understand the implications of appeasing the Nazis who destroyed this fine democratic state which Tomas Masaryk did so much to establish.

The Czechoslovak association of Canada calls upon all democrats to join with them in the public celebration of the anniversary of Tomas G. Masaryk's birth. I add my words to their plea, let us all join with them in their commemoration of the birth of this great man, and in the fervent hope that Czechoslovakia will, in the not too distant future, arise again as an independent democracy, free of the yoke of the tyrant.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my sentiments to those already expressed in connection with Tomas Masaryk. We of the Liberal party certainly do have inspiration from, and great respect for, the principles which Tomas Masaryk not only thought through but also practiced.

I had the pleasure yesterday of attending the commemoration at the Czechoslovakian Hall—Masaryk Hall in Toronto—of the anniversary of the birth of this great man. I know that the ideals that he expressed, and which he practiced, are like a beacon to the whole world of how freedom can be developed when men are inspired and have courage. Masaryk stands out as a mountaintop for his thoughts and for his actions, and I know that we in the Liberal party are very proud on this day to commemorate the birthday of Tomas Masaryk.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my tribute to the memory of Tomas Masaryk on the occasion of this 110th anniversary; he is a man who worked out and practiced the philosophy of democratic socialism in fighting the tyranny of Hitler and the communists. His memory should be revered.

PRESQU'ILE PROVINCIAL PARK

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 72, "An Act respecting Presqu'ile provincial park."

He said: It goes to the committee of lands and forests; but the purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to cancel an old survey which was made in 1797 and it has been superseded by a more recent plan.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PROVINCIAL PARKS ACT, 1958

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 73, "An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act, 1958."

He said: The purpose of this bill is to provide the Minister with authority to enter into agreements with municipalities and statute labour boards for the building and the maintenance of roads leading to provincial parks.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE WARBLE FLY CONTROL ACT, 1952

Hon W. A. Goodfellow moves second reading of Bill No. 76, "An Act to amend The Warble Fly Control Act, 1952."

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of sending the 3 or 4 bills on the order paper to the committee, I move second reading of Bill No. 76, "An Act to amend The Warble Fly Control Act, 1952."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE WEED CONTROL ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves second reading of Bill No. 77, "The Weed Control Act, 1960.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DISPOSAL OF DEAD ANIMALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves second reading of Bill No. 78, "An Act to provide for the disposal of dead animals."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FARM PRODUCTS GRADES AND SALES ACT

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves second reading of Bill No. 79, "An Act to amend The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 80, "An Act to amend The County Judges Act."

He said: On first reading I gave to the House, at the request of an hon. member opposite, the information concerning this bill, and unless there is something further required, I would say it will go to legal bills.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE REGULATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 81, "An Act to amend The Regulations Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender moves second reading of Bill No. 84, "An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before you put that motion, I would like to move an amendment.

It is the traditional right of members of the Legislature to move an amendment dealing with the redress of a grievance before the granting of supplies. As a matter of fact, just so that we may be clear on this point, perhaps I can quote the relevant section from May on page 728 of the 16th edition:

Amendments to the questions of a Speaker leaving the chair should be strictly relevant to the branch of estimates of which notice has been given, and they should not raise matters of detail which are more properly to be dealt with by the committee of supply.

Now, in notifying the House on Friday, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) indicated that he was going to call a supply for The Attorney-General's Department and The Department of Energy Resources today.

The amendment that I want to make is with regard to what I think is a very serious grievance in this connection. Some two weeks ago—almost three weeks ago now—after this House giving serious consideration, by way of debate but no action, to the Elliot Lake and Bancroft situation, the committee on energy considered this matter for a full hour and a half. The debate was concluded by a unanimous motion for the establishment of a sub-committee to be made up of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), the chairman of the committee, and the leaders of the two Opposition parties to work out an agenda to come to grips with this emergency situation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that unanimous decision of the committee has been so affronted, so ignored, that the sub-committee has not even been called to consider the matter in the past 3 weeks.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. T. D. Thomas, that all the words after "that" be struck out of the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into committee of supply, and that the following be substituted therefor:

This House regrets the failure of this government to present a realistic programme of assistance to the local government and citizens of the uranium mining communities, as evidenced by its failure to hold a meeting of a sub-committee set up on Thursday, February 18, 1960 by unanimous vote of the committee on energy to draft an agenda for coping with the emergency situation faced by the Elliot Lake and Bancroft areas.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I wonder whether that motion is at all in order. It has nothing to do with these estimates whatever. Furthermore, I think there is some doubt, I mean I am not familiar with the point he raises there, but I am just in doubt as to the power of a committee of the House to appoint a sub-committee.

The point is this, I do not think that this motion has the slightest thing to do with these estimates, and I think it is purely out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, before you make your decision, may I make this one point very clear, in case it is on this technicality that the hon. Prime Minister is hanging his argument.

It is a normal procedure in this House that we move into supply to deal with one department and then we proceed directly to another department. The hon. Prime Minister has indicated to us that today we would consider the estimates of The Department of The Attorney-General and The Department of Energy Resources, and we would normally move directly from one to the other without reverting to the whole House at which time it would be possible to exercise our right to move this amendment.

Now, if the hon. Prime Minister is indicating that we are now going to deal only with the estimate of The Attorney-General's Department I concede his point, but only on the assurance from him that we will revert to the whole House so that I will then have an opportunity to present this motion in accordance with the rights of a legislative member before we proceed to consider the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to my hon. friend that, as a matter of fact, I had no possible hope or intention that we would reach The Department of Energy Resources today. It was in projecting the work for today and tomorrow with the hope that The Department of Energy Resources would be reached tomorrow.

Now, I would say, sir, today my hope had been that we would be dealing with the supplementary estimates. The hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is absent due to attending the funeral of the late Mrs. Daley, the mother of the hon. Minister of Labour, and we would be proceeding at once with The Attorney-General's Department.

I would express the hope that we might complete that department by adjournment time tonight but I would be very glad to give this undertaking, that I had no intention, and have no intention, of calling The Department of Energy Resources estimates today.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that condition may I just add this further word—with the hon. Prime Minister's explanation the matter has now been clarified. He is not calling The Department of Energy Resources estimates. I will leave this motion with you and move it when we move toward The Department of Energy Resources estimates.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may, and I may be a little out of order in going back to this again, my understanding, from the hon. Prime Minister, was that The Department of Energy Resources was to be called tomorrow. Very frankly, it was my intention to seriously ask you to deal with a resolution that is on the order paper and advise us exactly what you intend to do about it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be that I am out of order right now, but it was my intention later on this afternoon to ask you the same question, and I will ask it immediately.

What disposition do you intend to make of the resolution that is on the order paper, originally under my name, but now I believe under the hon. member for Stormont's (Mr. Manley's) name:

That this House petition the federal government to move the reactor that is proposed for Manitoba to Elliot Lake.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be frank in saying that I have not determined anything with regard to that motion.

I would say, sir, that today there is a delegation meeting with the federal government. Some of the hon. members of this House who are interested in the uranium areas are there, including the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Brown), and the hon. member for Hastings East (Mr. Rollins). The hon. member for Hastings West (Mr. Sandercock) was unable to be there on account of a private bill this morning, but perhaps we might be able to report some progress tomorrow, I am not sure about that.

As regards the other resolution, sir, I am not prepared to say at the moment.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: —that is to make progress.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I know. But we must face up to this sooner or later. Very frankly, Mr. Speaker, it amazes me that there should—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is the way we—

Mr. MacDonald: It is a violation of the decision of the energy committee.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well now, just a minute. Mr. Speaker, I think we must voice serious objection to this. The hon. member for York South has pointed out, and very accurately, that the energy committee—at, I might say, the instigation of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, whom we all supported—came into a meeting shortly after the discussion in this House, and said very emphatically and rightly that we should consider ways and means of bringing some thought to the solution of the Elliot Lake situation.

He made some suggestions. He inquired whether it would be wise to send a delegation to Elliot Lake. There was some difference of opinion in that respect.

Another suggestion was that we might invite the operators to the committee. Objection was not taken to that, but it was pointed out that there might be people more knowledgeable than the actual owners.

Therefore, it was resolved that a committee of 4 be set up to study ways and means of bringing this matter to a conclusion.

Now, as the hon. member for York South has said, that committee has never met, and it amazes me to know now a committee is, in fact, meeting. I do not think that this is right. I do not know how the Opposition can hope to function if it is not to be kept apprised and advised of procedures.

Mr. MacDonald: We are being given the run around.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I certainly am going to voice the strongest objection if, before the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources come in, any member of government stands up and says at that time, this is what we have not done. That is purely petty politics.

Liberal hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wintermeyer: We have brought this to the attention of the House. We have done everything, including certain moves that pricked, I will frankly tell hon. members, my legalistic pride. But I did it because I thought it was a prudent decision at the time.

Now, I do think that, if we are going to be just ignored as an Opposition group, then the only alternative that we have is to abuse some of the rules of the House. It is a very unpalatable thing to do, a very undesirable thing to do, but this is a very serious social-economic problem.

I advise the hon. Prime Minister that we will, and we were going to press this very point of view later on today.

We will pursue it tomorrow before The Department of Energy Resources estimates are called, and I certainly hope that the hon. Prime Minister at that time will not take shelter in suggesting that he, in his discretion, has appointed a committee made up of civil servants and a few Conservative hon. members to study this problem and hope that—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will say, sir, that I did not appoint any committee. What happened—just a moment, sir, just a moment, sir.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, are we going to debate this now?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no. I am just answering a question, and when I am through answering the question then it is through.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say this, sir, that I say to the House that I mentioned the hon. member for Hastings West as being here today and I should have mentioned the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton).

Now, this concerned a deputation from the Bancroft area and it had to do with the peculiar situation in the Bancroft area which differs a good deal from the Elliot Lake area, and therefore, after discussion with the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin, I felt that it was not necessary for him to go.

Now, I would say to my hon. friend that—

Some Liberal hon. members: Oh, ho! Ho!

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no, now wait. I would say this, sir, that this deputation concerns a deputation from the Bancroft area itself, under the leadership of a number of citizens, including Father Maloney, who was with us here the other day, and those connected with some of the mines, and the municipal people, and also some of the hon. members from the local area.

Now, if my hon. friend wants to bring this matter up at the time of the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources, well, we will have to see whether he is within the rules or not. And now, I have answered the question which, I think, is a very full and satisfactory answer.

An hon. member: How we run this government!

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Frost that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

On vote 201:

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Chairman, I propose, with your permission again this year, as I have on several previous occasions, to speak briefly as each vote is called with respect to a number of items pertaining to my department, and more evidently related to the subject matter of the respective vote.

But, before doing so, I would like to make a few general remarks to the committee.

There are some 3,595 persons on the permanent and temporary staffs of The Department of the Attorney-General. In addition, there are approximately 50 persons on the casual staff.

The total amount of proposed expenditures to be voted this year is $21,987,000 which is $1,128,000 more than last year. The amount of proposed statutory expenditures is $213,000.

The accountant for the department who is with me here, Mr. Gourley, informs me that the amount voted last year will just about take care of the requirements, and that there will be no need for additional funds for the current year ending March 31.

Almost $800,000 of the afore-mentioned $1,128,000 increase is reflected in increases in salary of personnel. It will be recalled that, as of October 1, 1959, a general increase in salaries was authorized throughout the whole civil service.

The figures also take into account the normal annual increment for employees who will be eligible.

Mr. Chairman, there are some 31 branches and divisions of this department and there are 22 votes. But a number of the branches and divisions are shown under the items such as inspector of legal offices and criminal justice accounts.

I would like to pay tribute to the Deputy Attorney-General (Mr. Common), who is seated in front of me, and to the Assistant Deputy Attorney-General (Mr. Silk), to the staff of my department, and, in particular, to the department heads, those who exercise the supervisory jurisdiction, for the loyalty that I have received throughout the year, and for the excellent amount and nature of the work that has been done by everybody. I think I can include everybody in this department.

In line with the desire of the government, wherever possible, to keep expenditures within its revenues for the fiscal year 1960-1961, The Department of the Attorney-General, through its branch heads, has reviewed the estimates on several occasions. And on each occasion, a certain paring has been done. So this tight money situation which we have all heard so much about is being impressed on all of us.

But it reminds me a little of the story of the burglar who, at midnight, broke into the poor minister's home and was disturbed as he was in the room of the occupant. He flashed on his flashlight and he said: "Don't you move, or you'll be a dead one. I'm looking for money."

Whereupon the minister looked up and said: "Oh, let me get up and switch on the light, I'll help you hunt for it."

Mr. Chairman, if anybody in this House can help me hunt for just a little bit more, and the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is not present today, why I will be glad—and for his assistance too. But in the meantime I am going to try to do the best I can with the amount I have asked for.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): That is not what he said in 1957.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: However, in a growing economy, it is essential that a department as intimately associated with the lives of the people of the province such as The Attorney-General's Department must provide the necessary services in conformity with such growth and expansion. In fact, the cornerstone upon which civilized nations, and particularly the democracies build, is the rule of law.

May I again draw to the attention of the committee the fact that the continuity of personnel in The Department of the Attorney-General compares very favourably with that of employers generally. And I think that is a pretty fair test, Mr. Chairman, of the way that the service, insofar as it is reflected in my department is concerned, is doing in the general life of the community. It also compares very favourably with the turnover of the civil service of Ontario generally. Again my department's turnover was 7.3 per cent., as compared with the 11.1 per cent. turnover for the entire civil service in the calendar year 1959.

When some of the other hon. gentlemen speak, I challenge any of them to show any better record than that. I am glad to say that there is a distinct improvement in the continuity figures for 1959 over the immediately preceding year, both with respect to my own department and with respect to civil service in general.

Absenteeism also showed a decided decline in 1959. For the Ontario provincial police it was .24 days per man per month, and in the balance of the department, it was .59 days per man per month.

Again looking at the entire civil service, in 1959 the average was .71 days per man per month.

Mr. Chairman, as I turn to the votes on this day, March 7, 1960, in addition to the tribute which has been paid by several hon. members already to the fact that today is the 110th anniversary of a great champion of liberty, I would also say that, if it were not for leap year, today would be the 6th, and if I am wrong this time, I will never try it again, but I think, yesterday was the birthday of the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. Wintermeyer: Right, right.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am sure we all wish him many happy returns.

Mr. Chairman, you have called vote 201, and in connection with that vote, I would just like to make these preliminary comments. I would refer to a number of committees which have been working in recent years, in or related to my department or in association with it, which I find extremely helpful in the administration of justice. There are some new hon. members in the House who I think would be interested in knowing of the existence of these committees.

First of all, there is the advisory committee to myself on the administration of justice. Another is the committee under the chairmanship of the Deputy Attorney-General dealing with salacious literature. The third one is the advisory committee chaired by Mr. Harry Doughty on Metro juvenile and family court matters.

The fourth is the magistrates committee which co-ordinates conferences and seminars and works with the magistrates.

The fifth is the coroners committee under the chairmanship of the Assistant Deputy Attorney-General.

The sixth is the advisory committee to the fire marshal. The seventh is the finance committee of the supreme court. The eighth is the committee of advisors to the public trustee. In addition to that, for a particular purpose, there is a committee of volunteers under the chairmanship of the Deputy Attorney-General, to study the methods of police training and the requirements for a police college. The report from that committee was recently released.

And then finally we have another volunteer committee which, I think, has great promise of accomplishing much, making a study of alcoholism in relation to repeaters in jail on charges of drunkenness. In that connection, for the day-to-day contact, I must pay tribute to Mr. Frank Wilson and to Mr. MacFarlane of the department of probation.

With respect to the police committee which has now given several months of study to the subject, recommendations were made recently stressing that a new and comprehensive police system is essential to law enforcement, and recommending that such a system be accomplished by the establishment of a police college, by the province, of sufficient dimensions to permit not only the training of recruits but of officers of all levels and ranks.

Mr. Chairman, I must say that I did not realize until now how admirably suited so many centres in our province are for just such a college. But there is going to be only one college and, therefore, there can be only one spot eventually chosen.

In the meantime, it is important to proceed with specific seminars such as that conducted by the chief constables' association at McMaster University last year, and provision is made in the vote for that.

I think, also, that it will be of real interest to every hon. member to know that the total cost of municipal police forces in Ontario in 1958—the last year for which I could get the full figures—was $33,794 million. To that figure would be added the $11.256 million cost of the Ontario provincial police, to give an overall total cost for police in our province—and the work of policing—of just slightly more than $45 million or $45,051,061. I think the break-down of that is also of interest. Of that amount, for the cities outside of Metro, $12.7 million; for the towns, $4 million; for townships, $2.5 million; for villages, $.8 million, and that includes the improvement districts; and for the province itself $11.25 million, with $13.7 million for the largest of all in dollars—for the Metro force.

My guess is that, in this year 1960, the cost for all of these will probably be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50 million.

I have here the full details of all the municipalities and, if any hon. member is interested, I would be glad to furnish him with that information.

It is refreshing, Mr. Chairman, to get a copy of a report from a chief constable of a town with an overall police force strength of 6, which included these two sentences:

The efficiency of a police department can best be judged by the absence of crime in that community and only by the concentrated efforts of all members as well as the co-operative spirit of all law-abiding citizens can this desirable condition prevail.

And then he says this:

Although the past year was not without some serious crime, I am pleased to report that all but one have been solved, and the persons responsible brought to court.

I had a very good report also from the chief of police of Woodstock, and I thought there were certain remarks in the summary that would be of interest to this House:

Woodstock city has had no fatal accidents for 3.5 years. However—and this might be typical of some other courts, —juvenile and family court cases increased 100 per cent. in 1959. This is not an alarm—says the chief,

—but a reminder to parents that this trend does not spell future for the person or the place.

Most of the matters could have been worse—and I am interested in these comments, —but the domestic structure containing these youngsters needs much strengthening, control and supervision. This is a distasteful duty for officers—that is, police officers,

—namely, assembling evidence from children coupled with problems of some non-co-operating parents partly covering their own failures.

If we want to hold the line, we can no longer afford to let youth plunder into a trifling prank and reduce mayhem to a mischievous act, and pass off major crime as boyish misdemeanour.

Those are the words of Chief Ennis of Oxford who, no doubt, is well known to the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes).

With respect to the police committee, I mention also that they have made these recommendations and these reasons why perhaps we should proceed as soon as possible to that point in our plans of obtaining an overall training for police from a recruit right through to the most senior.

Now that, Mr. Chairman, brings me to the end of my remarks on vote 201, but I will crave your permission, as each vote is called, to say a few words.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Chairman; On the matter of vote 201, I would like to make some general remarks.

I would not want it to be construed that I was the official Opposition critic of The Attorney-General's Department, because that is something my legal hon. friends in the House have to undertake. But inasmuch as the Ontario provincial police take up well over half of the estimates of The Department of the Attorney-General—that is to say, $12.8 million out of $22.2 million—I wanted to have a few words, I think of interest to the province, to say about this police force.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Might I ask my hon. friend—

Mr. Wren: Well, these remarks are of a general nature. I will have some particular remarks to make at that time. I want to say this, Mr. Chairman. We have in Ontario one of the finest law enforcement agencies in North America and the English-speaking world, in my opinion. But it distresses me that we do not make that truth better known first to our own people and then to our visitors. It certainly follows that the best law enforcement is possible with the confidence of the people our police are sworn to protect.

Without detracting in any way from our fine national force, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, in Canada's largest province, that is Ontario, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are not the principal law enforcement agency, because their duties are confined to the enforcement of specified federal statutes which usually have little daily application to our living in Ontario.

The criminal code of Canada, together with all the provincial statutes are the responsibility of the Ontario provincial police to enforce, along with the assistance, of course, of municipal forces, where applicable. In serious statutory offences, in all but the largest cities, our provincial police force is invariably called in and often heads up the investigation. In all cases, they augment the work of local forces through co-operation and facilities.

The enforcement of The Highway Traffic Act and The Department of Transport regulations is an Ontario provincial police responsibility and a great responsibility it is. And in this work they come in daily contact with thousands of people, citizen and visitor alike.

Then in northern and northwestern Ontario, in vast areas without municipal organization, the Ontario provincial police are virtually the law. And I may say here, Mr. Speaker, they are doing a good job.

We do not read about them, I regret to say, in Ontario travel folders; instead the law is represented there by a red coat. We do not see the Ontario provincial police galloping across the TV screen spewing a never-ending stream of bullets from a belt-fed six-shooter.

We do not see them in hot pursuit of a Prime Minister who does not answer his mail.

Instead, we find them busy performing duties which they consider routine, while covering territory which would even tax Sergeant Friday. Yes, in the silence of the sub-zero woods, even the Lone Ranger would not follow unless he was accompanied by both Tonto and his brother.

In its modesty, the force does not portray its widespread activity and its travels by aircraft, canoe, dog team, railway hand cars, freight trains, snowmobile, snowshoes and so on, eased somewhat today by helicopter and modern facilities. Yet, to get their man, or to investigate arson in our forests, for example, they still have to resort to foot-slogging in territory which taxes the instincts of the most adventurous.

Yet we hear nothing of the real romance of law enforcement in Ontario, and what a story it is! And I must add that they have to be bold, adventurous men dedicated to their work, because they often do not enjoy the working conditions of other police agencies in Ontario.

Let me mention again traffic control, to illustrate a point. When our American friends cross the border and sense that their speedometer has crept too far forward, they are prone, as we all are, to watch the rear-view mirror. The Americans, though, look in their rear-view mirror for the sight of a red-coated constable, replete with pistol and lasso, in hot pursuit on a lathered stallion.

Perhaps that is the reason for the green strip in the centre of the Queen Elizabeth highway.

But it would take some horse to catch a Cadillac, even the old one driven by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Hall). But the TV and our own travel folders have so persuaded the American mind that we have only the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in this country, that, when they visit us and find our pretty Ontario travel bureau receptionists in red coats, the picture is complete.

I recall, in fact, an incident which occurred a few years ago while en route to a Shrine cavalcade in North Dakota. We stopped at the Ontario travel bureau in Fort Frances for some information and, while there, an American family drove up in their car. One of the youngsters leaned out of the window and said: "Look Daddy, all the Mounties must be at the north pole, because the lady mounties are here."

What I am getting at, Mr. Chairman, is this: Why cannot we produce a likeness of one of our own handsome constables on our travel literature, and on our road maps, to point out our law officers to the traveller in Ontario? These are the men, and not the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who will help them through a safe journey and be available to them in case of need. I have been in tourist camps, for example, when an Ontario provincial police officer was interviewing guests in line of duty. There was a reluctance and suspicion there on the part of those guests, because this was not a red-coated man on a horse, and perhaps just some country constable.

To do this would provide, I submit, some well deserved boost to morale in this force and, in addition, properly acquaint our visitors with our chief law enforcement agency.

In fact, I wonder how many Ontario people are aware of the kind of men we have? How many would understand in Ontario, for example, the responsibilities of officers like Inspector Corsie at Kenora and Inspector Ericksen at the Lakehead? Between them, these men enforce the law in an area far larger than Great Britain.

In an instant they could be faced with decisions ranging from crafty forgers at the border to an overextended pow-wow in the frozen north on Hudson Bay.

In a twinkling they might have to order a young constable into a camp deep in the woods, where the aftermath of a goof party has all the appearances of a Mau Mau uprising in Africa. And although there is no Crown attorney nearby to give advice, a decision must be made on the spot. Should the culprits be moved at great expense a few hundred miles south by air to recover a $50 fine at most? Or should the constable dress them down as the father would a wayward son? Or, if taken to the courts at public expense, will a smart city lawyer find a loophole in our crazy liquor laws and set them free, only to deeply embarrass the officer?

In my riding some 15 months ago one of these brave young men—Constable Fulford—answered a call to check a drinking party and ensuing row. He met his death on the path to the cabin from a weapon in the hands of a drink-crazed marksman, and 4 other people died with him in the same incident. Immediately, the inspector had to summon men from great distances to round up the assassin, and weigh that decision against the police needs of the vast areas from which he was withdrawing constables. The murderer was subdued and subsequently hanged.

On another occasion—and I could relate dozens of them—a mentally unbalanced railway worker at a lonely section post went berserk with a big game rifle, taking friendly shots at rapidly disappearing neighbours. Then he barricaded himself in a solid cabin and said in effect: "Come and get me." Again the Ontario provincial police had to move in and into a situation as dangerous as could be, and as epic as the "mad trapper" episode of yesteryear in the Yukon. At great risk, they subdued the man under conditions which in war would have meant high decoration, but it was a routine affair for these men in the northwest.

Then I have seen one constable have to move into a situation where the offenders were of such size and strength—and surrounded by the debris of former walls and furniture—that any one of these men could subdue Whipper Billy Watson with one hand in his back pocket. And, if they were turned loose in one of those tag matches at Maple Leaf Gardens, they would quickly remove the drama and pathos from wrestling.

But here again, without help and relying on training the constable must cajole, persuade, and lean on the majesty of the law to restore order.

That is why I emphasize here that our force should get more morale boosting publicity.

Of course, we have our share of murder, rape, robbery, car theft, highgrading, arson and what have you which would overtax the facilities even of a Metro police force. But here again, such crimes are handled by a handful of men almost entirely on their own resources.

If I have taken the time of the House unduly, it has been for the purpose of impressing on the hon. members here the fine work performed by our own Ontario provincial police sometimes under almost unbelievable conditions. They deserve better support from us. They deserve better recognition than that of being pointed up as second class police officers, even in our own literature.

They are, all things considered, a first-class police force working with, I submit, second class public support.

They need more men, especially on traffic. They deserve better pay and better working conditions and hours. I am cognizant of the fact that the hon. Attorney-General has seen fit to support measures to provide housing and facilities particularly in the north. There are still some glaring deficiencies at Dryden particularly, and at Kenora. But the hon. Attorney-General has promised me action on these things as well.

However, my main purpose today was to point out another area of neglect on our part, that of recognizing and publicizing a great body of men.

They are not to blame for our inadequate liquor laws, they are not to blame for the mounting highway death toll. We make the laws, they enforce them. We provide the money which just goes so far and is not enough at this time for needed recruitment.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, let us devote a little more attention to maintaining the fine spirit which this force has already displayed—to a great degree, I submit, on their own initiative.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Just before the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) speaks, I would like to say that, before I finish, I will have considerably more to say, both on safety and under police items on this subject.

But I fully concur with what the hon. member for Kenora said, and have myself been endeavouring to instil in the police a little more attention to public relations, in an exterior manner, than just keeping their noses to the grindstone.

They are a great force, I agree with everything my hon. friend said in that respect, and I can assure him that we thank him for those remarks.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, under vote 201, the hon. Attorney-General mentioned that there are several committees set up by his department, and one of those was a committee on salacious literature under the chairmanship of the Deputy Attorney-General.

I have two or three questions that I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General. How much did the committee cost in the past year? How many meetings did they have, and how many charges have been laid as a result of their activities?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, in the first place dealing with the last one first, the committee was not really set up to lay charges.

Mr. Whicher: How many did the department lay?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is not their purpose. The committee was set up as a representative group of people, early in this session. Anybody in this House who wished to attend a meeting of that committee was invited to do so, and a number of hon. members did attend. I think it is proposed to have another meeting before this House adjourns, at which time hon. members again can have the opportunity of attending.

This committee was set up to try to assist in working out a long-term plan which would work towards a better control over this subject, and a better appreciation of all the problems that were involved.

Actually, no one on the committee received pay; travelling expenses amounted to $642; there was some printing, I think, of some of the material, the reporters taking down certain evidence which may have amounted to about $300.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I agree that probably it was not the committee's decision to lay charges. But, on the other hand, they were to have deliberations and, no doubt, were to pass on any information that they could find from their deliberations to The Department of the Attorney-General.

So my question is simply this: How many charges have been laid by The Department of the Attorney-General in the past year, as far as this matter is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: As I said before to the hon. member, the committee was not set up to lay charges—I did not tell any committee to come in and tell me to lay charges—

Mr. Whicher: I asked the hon. Attorney-General how many charges were laid by his department.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My department does not lay charges.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How did the charges of the hon. member make out?

Mr. Whicher: I will tell the hon. Prime Minister in a minute. They made out very badly because they did not have the co-operation of the hon. Attorney-General.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, now.

Mr. Whicher: Yes, sir.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think I am correct in saying, since I have been in office at any rate, when a charge has been laid after consultation with the Deputy Attorney-General, there has been a conviction. That goes for one of the biggest ones, and the one that cleaned out more in the one decision than anything that happened previously in the case of the American News case in Ottawa.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, my question still has not been answered. How many charges were laid in the past year in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member can get that information. There have been some charges—the hon. member laid one. I see he has been laying charges in another field, I hope he is not getting into the field of common informer, but we will get the figures.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, this is what I suggest. I suggest that there have been none, or—if there have been any—very, very few. And I suggest this: If none has been laid by The Department of the Attorney-General, then is it correct to presume that he is well satisfied with the literature on all Ontario newsstands at the present time? Is it correct to assume that?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The committee speaks for itself, and the work this department is doing speaks for itself, and the general policing speaks for itself. Where there has been any good reason for prosecuting, prosecutions have taken place.

I can recall at least one prosecution within the last year where a person involved with a film was prosecuted, and I think there have been several others.

But we can get any figures on that and give them to the hon. member later.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make further reference to this because the hon. Prime Minister asked how my charges came out last year. I am not the least bit ashamed of anything I did. I did lay a charge, as a matter of fact, and the gentleman concerned was found guilty. On an appeal it was quashed, of course. I suggest that it very well could have been kept right on. But through you, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. Attorney-General—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: In order to put the hon. member straight on that, there was no further appeal possible.

Mr. Whicher: All right. Well, then, I am not a lawyer and I am quite willing to take the word of the hon. Attorney-General for it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We did our best for the hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: They did their best? They did not do one solitary thing. Now, this is exactly what happened—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, if we had paid them, he would lose his seat in the legislative assembly, would he not?

Mr. Whicher: I suggest this, Mr. Chairman, that it is not fair to have to have private individuals lay charges on any subject, whether it be salacious literature or any other subject that is covered by the laws of the province of Ontario. That is why we have government departments.

But in this particular instance, we have the hon. Attorney-General coming in here year after year trying to cover his sins by having a committee of certain good people across this province who gather about once or twice a year, who have a total expenditure of $636 in one year. Because he has this committee, he attempts to tell the people of this province that he is trying to look after the moral welfare of our children by keeping certain books and literature and periodicals off the newsstands of this province.

Now then, I say this, Mr. Chairman, that this government—and particularly The Department of the Attorney-General—is completely hypocritical as far as this stand is concerned. It pretends that it is interested in the moral welfare of our children, but it does not do one single thing about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, that is wrong.

Mr. Whicher: Well, they appointed a committee, that is what they did, a committee whose expenses were $636 in one particular year, and they leave the matter entirely to the individuals.

If hon. members will look at Hansard of last year, they will see that a challenge was thrown across to me in a laughing manner, to go ahead and lay a charge. And I suggest the hon. Attorney-General was not laughing so much when we got the first conviction down in the city hall.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would like the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, to come down to earth for a minute. I now rise on a point of order. I am very serious in the work that I am doing in this department, and when an hon. member begins to suggest that I did not want to see a conviction, I ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. Whicher: I did not say that. I suggested this: The hon. Attorney-General did not want to see a charge laid. That is what he did not want to do. Does the hon. Attorney-General deny it?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, if the evidence is presented to a Crown attorney who knows his job, and he thinks the evidence is proper for laying a charge, he will lay a charge. If he does not lay one, and someone else wants to lay one, and then does not succeed, why blame the Crown attorney or the head of the department?

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am certainly not blaming the Crown attorney, I am blaming the hon. Attorney-General and his department. Why should an individual have to do it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is all wrong.

Mr. Whicher: And the same thing goes as far as The Liquor Control Act in this province is concerned. This government is hypocritical, it tries to play both ends against the middle. The hon. Attorney-General pretends that he is interested in our children, in the moral welfare of these children, and at the same time the hon. Attorney-General mentions that, in the city of Woodstock juvenile delinquency—or something like that—had increased by 100 per cent. in the past year. I suggest he do something about it.

This committee, as far as I can see, is a farce.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We might as well get this straight on the record as well. This is not an indictable offence, this is an offence under The Summary Convictions Act. I suggest, before the hon. member gets up and asks further questions and makes further irresponsible statements, that he consult with the hon. member on his right who knows something about law.

Mr. Whicher: Well, that is all right. As a matter of fact, if I do consult with the hon. member on my right, I would do that before I would go to The Department of the Attorney-General, where evidently they do not know anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, as a matter of fact, let us get down to cases. Last year the hon. member said some of these same things in the House. He rushed down to the Crown attorney and laid some charges—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. Prime Minister told him to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right. The hon. member laid some charges and he lost out, you see, he lost out. He went to court and he was licked.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, and is the hon. Prime Minister proud of that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would repeat what was said here last year, that this is a very difficult area in which to deal. There are, according to the papers, wide differences of opinion. There is a book known as Lady Chatterley's Lover—I have not read that—but most of the Opposition seem to spend their spare time reading it. In any event they seem to know all about the chapters.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not think the hon. Prime Minister intended that last statement, but when it comes up in Hansard, it will have a devastating effect. There was no suggestion that we are taking our time reading that book, or any other particular book. I know the hon. Prime Minister did not mean to infer that, and I would ask him in his usual—

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): You have got to read it too.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, we do not read books like that. But I would say that it is very difficult to obtain convictions on these things, and if the hon. members opposite do not believe that, they should read the correspondence columns of the papers. These things are difficult.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, we tried to tell this to the hon. member for Bruce last year. But he would not believe us, so he rushed down to court and got licked.

Mr. Whicher: Well, it was not a bad licking, I might say. We won on the initial case.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member got a good licking.

Mr. Whicher: It was not bad at all. I did not mind it at all, and I feel that the law has been changed slightly and that the hon. Attorney-General should go and do something about it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, on the main office estimates, there are some general observations that I would like to make with regard to crime and the detection of crime in this province.

I was very interested, a week or two ago, in hearing the hon. Attorney-General's announcement that he was going to have an investigation into the whole question of second mortgages in the province of Ontario.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, are we coming back to the subject we just left, or is that disposed of?

Mr. MacDonald: I was referring to the hon. Attorney-General's investigation into the question of second mortgages. I am not aware that there is any difference in the situation today with regard to second mortgages, as compared to a few years ago, and therefore I am a little interested as to why the government is willing to move now. But that is not the most important point.

The important thing is that the hon. Attorney-General has moved, and I would like to commend him strongly, because I think in this move that the hon. Attorney-General has taken at least one step toward one of the most important areas of crime—far more important than conventional crime. I refer to the kind of crime that goes on within the framework of legality, and yet results in the general public being fleeced of far more than, in many instances, is the case with conventional crime.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that, in this move, the hon. Attorney-General has acknowledged that we are facing today a situation in which the nature of crime has, within the last generation or so, significantly changed.

To make this case briefly, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote a few passages from a standard text by Barnes and Jeters called New Horizons in Criminology.

Their comment is that the general public's consideration of crime is focused almost exclusively, or has been up until now, on what is known as traditional or conventional crime: robbery, burglary, larceny, forgery, assault and the like. Then they go on to point out, with some interesting statistical documentation, that this is really the least important aspect of crime.

They point out, for example, if I may quote from page 5, that:

Although we must continue to focus our attention on the underworld of crime, we must recognize the overworld of respectability that permits crime to flourish. Those who deal with overall crime problems should not only become more alert to the fundamental and significant change in crime patterns, but should adapt their thinking as well as their tactics to the reality of the 20th century.

They make this observation:

That exploitation of society as a whole, as opposed to the exploitation of specific individuals—the province of traditional crime, —has been prevalent for generations, but they were often tolerated if not actually condoned on the ground that they were a necessary adjunct of rugged individualism or free enterprise in exploiting our natural resources or in settling a new country.

On page 5 they have a graph which indicates—these are American figures, although I feel quite confident that they are roughly comparable to the situation in Canada—that the conventional crime annually results, in the United States, in a loss of $500 million, but that organized crime or racketeering white-collar crime results in an annual loss of $7.5 billion—in other words, 15 times the loss to society involved in what is known as traditional crime.

They point out, for example, that there was a day when a lawyer was regarded as somebody who came into the picture to protect a man after he had been convicted of crime, but not so today. They say that:

In the old days the successful criminal saw a good lawyer after he had committed the crime. Today, the clever super crook not infrequently plans his crime with the aid and counsel of a highly competent authority.

Mr. Grossman: Too many lawyers.

Mr. MacDonald: I trust that that protest did not come from the hon. members of the legal profession in the House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now he is insulting all the legal profession.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like the hon. Prime Minister to listen to this, because I think this is extremely significant. On page 10, they refer to the authoritative work that has been produced by the late Professor Sutherland on white-collar crime. Again I quote:

In his recent book, White-Collar Crime, he carefully examines the depredations of 70 large corporations. He found that the courts had declared a total of 980 legal decisions against these giant combines. The charges included violations in restraint of trade; misrepresentation in advertising; infringement against patents, copyrights and trade marks; unfair labour practices; rebates; financial frauds and violation of trusts; violation of war regulations; and other miscellaneous offences—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): What jurisdiction is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. MacDonald: I will get back to Ontario in a moment. The quotation continues:

Sixty per cent. of the corporations had an average of 4 criminal convictions, and could therefore be classed as habitual criminals according to the laws governing a traditional criminal.

Mr. Chairman, without giving any more quotations that are available here to document this case of the changing pattern of crime, I want to suggest that this is something that should be considered by the government.

The hon. Attorney-General has at least indicated his awareness of it in one field.

For example, during the past year—perhaps it is more than a year ago now—we had a multi-million dollar robbery in the city of Brockville when a bank or a trust company was relieved of well over $1 million worth of bonds and securities, and we discovered subsequently that these bonds had gotten into an international network which was operated by respectable people.

We discovered eventually—I think I am correct and the hon. Attorney-General can correct me if I am wrong—that there were even cases of these bonds being bought back by the insurance companies at a serious discount, so here were so-called respectable people, even insurance companies in the picture.

This just underlines once again, Mr. Chairman, some of the new nature of crime to which I suggest that The Attorney-General's Department should be giving some more detailed consideration.

I have been very interested in the past year, as a regular reader of the column of Pierre Berton, who, I think, should be paid a glowing tribute—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would the hon. member just let me say that, in connection with the Brockville robbery, it was more like $11 million than $1 million in securities which, in the first instance were taken, but actually this is being run down slowly but relentlessly.

A man was convicted in New York, I think, just last week and sentenced to a jail term, and there is another trial going on in Chicago. But it looks to me as if all the people involved are gradually being run to earth with respect to that.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is good. The only thing that rather intrigues me is that, when this kind of thing happens, we hear about it in the papers, and then it dies. Periodically, we see another little item on page 40 of the papers that somebody else has been picked up. But let some trade unionist be guilty of stealing $500, or guilty of a minor degree of racketeering, and it will be headlined on the front page for a long time.

Mr. Grossman: Well, tell the newspapers.

Mr. MacDonald: For example, Mr. Chairman, you might be interested in this—and I will ask the hon. Attorney-General as to whether or not this is a situation that has its duplicate here in the province of Ontario.

An hon. member: What about Hoffa?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member asks about Hoffa. I will tell him about Hoffa.

What Hoffa did was to apply the normal practices of the American business world in the trade union movement. Many of the normal practices of the American business world he applied in the trade union movement, and the trade union movement has taken very vigorous action with regard to his doing it. Look at the reason for it.

Mr. Whicher: Do they hire crooks?

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. Just listen for a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I have here in my hand an article that appeared in the Chicago-American of Friday, January 8, 1960, which is entitled:

STOP THIEF, IT'LL BE A CROOKED YEAR

Dated in Bridgeport, Connecticut, it reads:

Crooked executives, supervisors and workers will continue to steal American business blind in 1960, a New York management engineer said here.

Norman Jaspan, of Norman Jaspan Associates, told the controllers' institute of America that, "Management will continue to lose its battle against internal dishonesty this year." Jaspan said 250 firms will go to the wall because of thefts by officers or workers, 50 more than in 1959.

Employees will steal over $4 million a day, most of it by the executives and supervisors, rather than the ordinary workers.

The total exceeding $1 billion will be over twice as much as professional burglars and robbers managed to steal from the public in the course of a year.

Much of the losses will be so carefully hidden in the books of the companies involved that they never will be discovered, and consequently, thousands of companies will pay taxes on profits that they never earned or that were stolen.

On top of theft, the kickback racket will take a total of $5 billion in business in 1960, in spite of all the recent payola notoriety, Jaspan predicted.

He said stealing and payola cost business so much that, if they could be eliminated, the general price level of goods could be reduced by 15 per cent.

Mismanagement is responsible mainly, Jaspan said, and dishonesty is greatest among executives and supervisors. His company investigated $60 million in theft losses last year and found the bosses stole 62 per cent. of this.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat to the hon. Attorney-General, is this a situation for which we have a counterpart in the province of Ontario? What does the hon. Attorney-General propose might be done about it?

What has interested me about these constant revelations—and there is no doubt but that they reveal true facts, because nobody sues when a man like Pierre Berton continues to ferret into the operations, for example, of the real estate business, or the selling techniques in used car business or selling techniques generally. In other words, he reveals ways and means by which the public are being fleeced of millions of dollars a year.

Here is legalized robbery, and I submit that the day has come when, in our machinery for seeking justice, through The Attorney-General's Department, that we should be focusing more attention on this legalized robbery—without ignoring the important problem of conventional crime.

In other words, we should have vigorous action to root out what is known as white-collar crime.

As yet, we have had only this one particular instance, that of the second mortgages that the hon. Attorney-General has indicated he is going to do something about. And in that connection, Mr. Chairman—

Interjection by hon. Mr. Roberts.

Mr. MacDonald: May I finish? If the hon. Attorney-General has any comments, I would be very glad to have them from him. In fact, there are two or three of these points on which I would appreciate his comments.

In this same connection, I wonder what the hon. Attorney-General's observations are on what appears periodically in our courts, as a revelation of such a deeply ingrained prejudice, in some instances, on a straight class basis, so that it seriously raises the question of whether or not there is equality before the law.

For example, I have in my hand reference to a case that the hon. Attorney-General will be familiar with. It is from the Toronto Daily Star, December 5, 1959, a news story entitled: "What Is Collar Bone Worth?"

This is a case for a suit for damages as a result, I believe, of a car accident before the Ontario supreme court, and it was heard by Mr. Justice Schatz.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): And a very fine gentleman he is.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member is not suggesting that the hon. Attorney-General tells the judges what to do?

Mr. MacDonald: But here it is. I am just suggesting that the hon. Attorney-General take a look at the evidence of prejudice that emerged in this instance from the judge.

An hon. member: There was no predjudice in that case.

Mr. MacDonald: For example, Mr. Chairman, here are two paragraphs from the Toronto Star's report, and they are to be found in the Toronto Telegram and in the Toronto Globe and Mail if I were to take the time to read them in each case. They read as follows:

Rules the judge, "While there is some disability, as far as evening dress is concerned, this would not be as serious in this case as it might be otherwise."

In other words, this woman was a charwoman and therefore, before the law, it was not as serious a proposition, and she should only get $1,000.

Mr. Sopha: —television report.

Mr. MacDonald: Furthermore, it goes on to state in the news story that Mr. Justice Schatz said that Mrs. Hiesl held a station in life that would not warrant a higher award. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. Attorney-General for his comments.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for York South knows perfectly well, that the judge himself made statements in connection with this. A lot of statements were made at the time, and I do not see why he brings it up here.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I was quite honestly not aware of any statement that was made by the judge.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh yes, the judge made a statement himself, in which he put his position as he saw it, and I do not think I should comment on it any further. He made it very clear that he was—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, what about this other case?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: He had no intention of casting any doubts about the woman's caste or class or anything of that sort.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, what about this other case, to which public attention was drawn last week, in an editorial of the Toronto Star, to the contrast in justice that is meted out, as between a rich real estate man who was fined $9,000 for evading income tax, and, in contrast, two immigrant girls who pleaded guilty to shoplifting $175 received 30 days in jail with no opportunity to pay off their fines on any instalment basis. The editorial is quite rightly captioned "Rich Man's Justice?"

In other words, here is a serious problem in the rendering of justice, with evidence in some cases, of a prejudice in the courts, and of striking contrast between the kind of justice a rich man gets and some little person gets.

Now, I would appreciate it if the hon. Attorney-General would comment on the points that I have raised here—particularly as to what the government plans to do in pursuing the step they have now taken in detecting the legalized crime as involved in such business practices as the second mortgage and others that attention has been drawn to.

What can be done—maybe nothing can be done—about evidence of prejudice on the part of judgments by the court?

When hon. members protest, let them not forget this. I remember, a year or so ago, a case in which a certain magistrate in this city made a judgment, and one of the Maloney brothers publicly stated that he was going to make representation that this man should be removed from the bench. So let hon. members not say that it is somebody from the CCF ranks who does not have respect for the courts. I think that if a man on the bench gives evidence of prejudice, that Mr. Arthur Maloney was correct when he said that the man should be removed from the bench, and I would like the hon. Attorney-General's comments on it.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Would the hon. member not do 30 days for $9,000? I would.

Mr. MacDonald: It depends if I had another $1 million.

Mr. Lewis: Never mind, he would not need it then.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I will be dealing with some reference in relation to administration of justice, which would put the questions which my hon. friend has made in a little different light.

But I would just say that, if in any instance some judge does something that he should not do, and it goes to the basis of the injustice to the person concerned, there is in our system always a right of appeal. At some stage it is presumed that—if our system is sound, which we believe it to be—these things can always be righted.

I do not take it upon myself, in the position I hold in the nature of a temporary occupation of a job of this sort—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Temporary.

Hon. Mr. Roberts:—that I can go and tell all these judges, who sit there for life, how they should handle their cases.

But I do think that our system will stand a test, in the long run, of fairness to all, and certainly not in any sense being on a basis of class-type of decisions from the bench.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me ask the hon. Attorney-General this question. I agree with him that our court structure is certainly as good, if not better, than most court structures in the world. But that does not mean that we should avoid coming to grips with evidences that represent a denial of justice.

Now, the question I would like to put to the hon. Attorney-General is this: Assume we have, without discussing any specific case for the moment, a case of a judgment that has a clear indication of prejudice in it. Are the hon. Attorney-General and the government willing to carry that appeal, rather than to leave it to the charwoman, or whoever may be involved, to get justice by appealing to the higher court?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: In the case of our criminal courts, time and again where it is brought to the attention of my department that something has gone wrong at the trial, or wherever it happens to be, we will always take a look at the evidence. If we think steps should be taken to remedy a situation, where some wrong has been done to an accused, we are prepared to do that.

If we think the sentence is too heavy, we are prepared to tell the accused to go ahead and appeal. We will assist that appeal, and when it gets to the court of appeal, we will make it clear that we think it is too heavy.

Conversely, if it appears to be that it was not heavy enough, the same position may be taken the other way.

But the attempt is to give justice and be fair all the way through, and I know my hon.

friend will recall that there have been occasions since I have been in this office, where I have taken steps very quickly to bring about a balance of justice.

Mr. MacDonald: Well now, Mr. Chairman, before we leave this I would like to explore further the hon. Attorney-General's thinking on this earlier question I was raising, regarding white-collar crime—or what might be called legalized robbery—that appears to be practiced in certain phases of the business world.

Is the hon. Attorney-General planning to go beyond the step that he has taken in connection with second mortgages to other things—such as, for example, some of the practices in used car selling, or some of the real estate misrepresentations?

To make a start let us take as prima-facie cases some of the columns of Pierre Berton. Or do we just accept this, when it is pointed out, and say that this is part of a normal operation of the business world? Or that it may represent legalized robbery, but so what? Has the hon. Attorney-General any further steps in mind in this connection?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I can only answer that in this way, that at any time, if wrong-doing is brought to the attention of this department, we will always look into it. But we do not go out, in a general way, expecting that seemingly honest people are being dishonest. We are trying to find out where they are being dishonest.

There are a number of procedures already on our statute books, such as the security commission with which we will be dealing shortly, and other things, where the avenues are a little simpler to follow.

But at any time, if there is an obvious crime being committed in a business field—as the hon. member calls it—and it is brought to the attention of this department, I am sure it would be looked into thoroughly.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, what does the hon. Attorney-General consider as bringing evidence of wrong-doing to their attention? What constitutes bringing evidence of wrong-doing to his attention?

For example, if a newspaper columnist writes a column, such as has been done by Pierre Berton, on business practices—in a specific case in the used car field—does the hon. Attorney-General require any more attention being drawn to it than publication of the column? I know the hon. Attorney-General recognizes the difficulties, and I acknowledge them. But these operators are working within the law.

For example, we have the case that has already been touched on in this House, and dealt with at great length some years ago, where the people of the province of Ontario were fleeced of over $500,000 in the so-called united emergency fund for Britain.

Now what was done?

We amended The Charities Accounting Act, which presumably plugged the loophole which permitted this kind of legalized robbery. They investigated the whole operations but nothing happened.

Now, if some harmless little person steals a 64-cent pound of butter, he gets 30 days in jail. But if somebody fleeces the public of $500,000, nothing happens. How in heaven's name can the hon. Attorney-General justify that kind of thing?

Mr. Reaume: He is stretching the truth.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not stretching the truth.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not want to continue this, because it is obvious that it is an appeal that is impossible to deal with, when the hon. member talks in generalities—and practically sows the seeds of libel in every direction—and then expects me to pick one spot—

Mr. MacDonald: They are not generalities. I have cited some specific instances. Now that the hon. Attorney-General—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: While I am head of this department, we will try to administer the department in the best traditions of British justice and of fair play for everybody. I think, when I say this, that I cover a pretty broad area in which to work. We will be kept very busy no doubt throughout that period of time doing just that, and I hope that no case will be overlooked that is brought to the attention of the Crown attorneys or whoever should receive it—if it is a genuine case, a fraud or a crime.

I cannot answer any more than that. I could get up and go to High Park and stand on one of those—what do they call them—yes, soap boxes, and I could shout about all the disorders that go on all over the world and that sort of thing. But that is not curing it.

We are working day by day trying to cure and keep things in proper perspective, and I do not think my hon. friend is contributing anything at all with this sort of generalized charging of everything and everybody.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to pursue this any further, but the hon. Attorney-General has got up and indulged in the usual Tory trick.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacDonald: He accuses me of libelous generalities. I have asked him specifically what is he going to do on the detailed cases which nobody has disputed in two or three of Pierre Berton's columns. Now, without going any further—

Mr. Lewis: Has anybody laid a charge?

Mr. MacDonald: Look, we are back to the case here—

Mr. Lewis: Why does not the hon. member for York South get smart?

Mr. MacDonald: —all I can be certain of is that when a columnist details that kind of thing, if it were not true he would be sued.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the columnist thinks it serious enough to be a real crime, it is his duty to come and show the evidence and discuss the matter. But he has never done anything of that sort, and I do not read his column day by day. I may read it occasionally—

Mr. MacDonald: He should, and he—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I do not have the time to read every writer's daily column in the newspaper.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General should, and get some guides to running his department.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I just have not got the time. I would run into a little difficulty—

Interjection by hon. Mr. Maloney.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): I want to come back to this matter that we were discussing a little while ago, in regards to obscene literature.

In committee some time ago, I asked a question because I happen to know quite a bit about this because in my municipality, I have been chairman of the committee there for over 6 years. We are called an advisory committee to the police commission.

Now, we have accomplished quite a bit because we have taken some of the comics, and some of the magazines and pocket books, off the stands.

About a year and a half or so ago, there was a case down there and I felt that it was the duty of The Attorney-General's Department to come to the help of the Crown attorney in the municipality. It so happened that there was one book that was banned by the police commissioner of the city of Detroit. A certain distributor—or I would not call him a distributor—a vendor, let us put it that way, at the exit of the tunnel, displayed quite a few copies of this book, and as the people from Detroit were coming over they were buying this book in large quantities.

The Crown attorney went there and seized a certain number of copies and did lay a charge against the vendor.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not remember.

Mr. Belanger: Now, when it came up into court I will say this, that it was a case involving not only the vendor, the distributor, but also the publisher, and they knew that they had quite a case because it would have had quite a repercussion afterwards. They hired some very big name solicitor to represent them, and after the case was heard, the magistrate took quite some time before he handed down his decision, and he decided against the charge of the Crown attorney.

Now, I feel that in a case such as this, The Attorney-General's Department could do quite a bit to help the municipalities that do have committees of this type, and there are quite a few committees in the province. Committees should receive directives of some of the things that they should be looking for—some of the material that in the department's estimation they should base themselves on. In other words the department should give some directive to these committees.

We have based ourselves on what tends to corrupt and deprave. We have not gone out trying to lay charges right and left. We are very careful.

But I do feel that, if the hon. Attorney-General did something in regard to putting teeth in their laws, and answering questions coming from the various committees, quite a bit would be accomplished by this.

We have, at the present time, a censor board for films. I think that the same should be done with this type of material because I want to say this, it is not just a laughing matter. Some hon. members seem to take this very lightly, but let me tell them it means quite a bit to some of the parents of the children that we have in our care.

I think The Attorney-General's Department should lend moral support and leadership to these committees.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich knows that the salacious literature committee that I have mentioned has a representative from that area, a lady who lived in Windsor. I think she has now moved to Blenheim. But I am certain that, if there is anyone in charge of the local committee there who would see fit to communicate with the Deputy Attorney-General, they would get the utmost courtesy and assistance possible.

Mr. Belanger: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that she is a member of our committee and she has her own opinion of the committee that the hon. Attorney-General has at the present time, and the work that he is doing. It is not too favourable, let me put it that way.

Mr. Reaume: That will hold him for a while.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, about a few remarks that were made previously, remarks which I consider to be almost irresponsible, which were made by the hon. member for York South.

In his usual oratorical manner he rose and, in one broad swoop, condemned a whole class of people because of the fact that there are some people in this province who, apparently, are abusing second mortgage privileges. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that he is condemning, in fact, the real estate business.

If he is an informed man in this House, he is no doubt aware of the fact that the real estate business in this province is controlled by The Department of the Attorney-General, and if he was informed at all, he would know that these people are prohibited from dealing in second mortgages.

Of course, in his usual uninformed manner, he rises and, with half of the information, proceeds to condemn a whole class of people.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not say anything about real estate.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the reason I speak to this situation is that I wish to draw this to the attention of the House. I hope that the page boys were not listening because they are liable to grow up with the attitude that it is totally wrong and criminal to make an honest dollar and that making money is a sin, and that appears to be the intent of the remarks of the hon. member for York South, as usual.

The reason I rise to speak on this, Mr. Chairman, is that I feel it only fair to point out to the hon. member that this business is a legitimate business and that it is controlled by The Attorney-General's Department. If he has any facts, instead of innuendoes, he should take them to the hon. Attorney-General and give him the information so that proper charges could be laid.

Mr. MacDonald: He has it all mixed up.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to castigate the whole CCF party with these remarks. I think that there are some hon. members of the party that have a little more consideration for the feelings of others.

Mr. Chairman: Stick to the vote, please.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I come to the point on which I originally asked your permission to speak. I wanted to ask a question of the hon. Attorney-General, and it is going back to the question of obscene literature.

The hon. Attorney-General stated that this committee had been set up on this matter. I would like to ask him if the committee reported any cases of objectionable or obscene literature to his department during the past year.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The Deputy Attorney-General, who has been the chairman of that committee, informs me that there has been no direct report from any member in relation to any direct bit of literature. However, he says that Dr. Mohr, a professor at the university, who had been engaged to do a very thorough study, had been, from time to time, making reports. At the present time, there is a very keen effort being made to get an arrangement with the distributors that should go a long way towards keeping the stands clear.

As I said before, my hon. friend was at that meeting—on my invitation really—of the salacious literature committee, and they are going to meet again. I hope there will be some progress reported at the next meeting, and I invite him to come there and discuss it there at that point. But I do not need to go on indefinitely discussing it here.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, it is not my desire to go on discussing it indefinitely. I would like to know whether it is the duty of this committee to report cases of obscene literature to The Department of the Attorney-General.

The statement was made that there were no direct cases reported, and the point that I am trying to get here is that I want to know whether or not this committee, which spent $673, or whatever it was, were instructed in fact to report these cases, or whether they are sitting without authority and without any instructions from the hon. Attorney-General.

In other words, are they responsible to the hon. Attorney-General, and are they instructed to report these cases? Since there were no direct cases, I want to know whether it was the duty of this committee to report these cases to the hon. Attorney-General.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, it was definitely not their duty. This committee was set up for the purpose of trying to find broad solutions, and to try to recommend steps that could be taken that would come to grips with this problem, which is a very, very difficult problem.

The hon. member who spoke a moment ago said that the lady member from down his way was not too impressed with the work of the committee. All he has to do is sit in one morning to see that there are very different views expressed by different members of the committee on this subject, to realize just how troublesome and difficult it is.

Mr. Belanger: The hon. Attorney-General is moving too slowly on it, there is not enough action.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, it would appear that this committee is not instructed to report these things to the hon. Attorney-General. If that is so, I submit that it is probably a little bit wrong to pay their expenses, since they are really not reporting to anybody. Since public funds are being used, they should report to somebody in this government.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, there are several questions I want to ask the hon. Attorney-General, too. I do not feel at all embarrassed in asking questions about this particular subject, because all my life I have had something to do with teen-agers. I think this is one of the most important subjects we can deal with in this Legislature.

Whether or not there is a criminal law that applies, there is a very definite moral law about these particular subjects which we have been discussing now.

I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if his department has authority over newspaper ads in regard to films. Is that under his department?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is the hon. member speaking of advertising in relation to films that are being shown from day to day?

Mr. Troy: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is under the motion picture bureau.

Mr. Troy: Do any offensive, or what might be considered salacious, ads come under another department?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: These come under the department that deals with films, and with the allowing of films to come in and be shown in the province. That department does the overall examination.

Mr. Troy: Does The Department of the Attorney-General have anything to do with TV—the films that come into Ontario via the television waves?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, those are entirely federal controls, we have no control over that.

Mr. Troy: And lastly, does his department have anything to do with this payola TV?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No. The answer is no.

Mr. Troy: Well, does it not come under The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act and also under the payment of amusement taxes? Is not this payola TV under that?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It has nothing to do with my department. I do not collect amusement tax.

Mr. Troy: So the hon. Attorney-General has nothing to do with pay TV at all? He has nothing to do with salacious literature as we find in advertisements of films?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is right, the advertisement is tied in with the film itself.

Mr. Troy: Thank you.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, there is another matter that I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General about. I believe it probably comes under vote 201.

Recently there was a case that got as far as the supreme court of Canada—I do not believe that judgment has been rendered yet—involving the constitutionality of an Alberta statute called The Orderly Payment of Debt Act.

According to my information this Alberta statute, the constitutionality of which was being challenged before the supreme court, is essentially the same legislation as are certain sections contained in The Division Courts Act of Ontario.

As I understand it, the province of Ontario was not represented in the argument before the supreme court on the constitutionality of a statute which really also affects the constitutionality of its own statute.

I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if the fact that Ontario was not represented before the supreme court, when this case was argued, is an indication that it is not concerned about the particular sections of The Division Courts Act which formed the basis for The Alberta Orderly Payment of Debt Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My Deputy tells me that we did intervene and filed a factum in this case, and actually appeared on it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to find out, from the hon. Attorney-General, how many lawyers are represented in this first salary figure of $281,000?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There are about 182 lawyers all over the province, including Crown attorneys.

Mr. Singer: But this is the main office expenditure. How many lawyers are there in the main office of the hon. Attorney-General?

Mr. Grossman: That is barely enough for one lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Twelve lawyers.

Mr. Singer: Twelve? Well, I wonder, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it appears there is a substantial turnover in the legal staff of the department of the hon. Attorney-General, what arrangements, if any, are being made to adjust or set salary levels for the lawyers in his department?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am quite satisfied with the legal staff of the department and the rate of turnover, and the opportunities of obtaining replacements.

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Chairman, I should like to just follow through with what the hon. member for York Centre just asked.

I do not see any reason why the hon. Attorney-General ought to be satisfied with the rate of turnover in his department, because I can say from my personal experience that there appears to have been a considerable turnover during the past 4 or 5 years—especially in that part of his department where the unsatisfied judgment fund is—I will not say “administered”—but where the legal work is done on behalf of defaulting defendants.

Perhaps it would be unfair, Mr. Chairman, to name some of the people who have been in that department and have since departed. But I venture to say that the number of those who have worked in the past 5 years in that branch of his department, and who are no longer there, would approach about 15.

Recently, one of the older members of the staff saw the opportunity to become a city solicitor, and he took off for what he must have felt was a greener pasture.

But I would think, Mr. Chairman, that that being the case—and I have no doubt it is the case—the turnover is significant in that branch of his department. It must stem from unsatisfactory salary arrangements with those people, and if they are paying something in the neighbourhood of $4,000 or $5,000, I do not think it is at all surprising that those young lawyers should look for something better in their profession in some other place.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We are not faced with that problem. There is a certain amount of routine work in that particular branch that the hon. member has referred to, which to some lawyers is not too interesting after a certain period of time. Like a lot of young lawyers—like myself when I was young, I moved around once or twice, I did not settle at the first place I went to—they are doing the same thing.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, it cannot be answered quite as easily as that—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is a fact.

Mr. Sopha: —because I take it from the remarks of the hon. Attorney-General that it is an admission that there has been such a turnover.

Mr. Grossman: They should go into the CCF. They really pay their lawyers.

Mr. Sopha: The result of it, Mr. Chairman, means that the litigants represented by counsel, who want to notify his department that there has been a default in defence, or default in some stage of the action, are met with considerable delays.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I will come to that when I get to it in my estimates. We will deal with the unsatisfied judgment fund end of it.

Mr. Sopha: I am coming to it right now—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Most of that sort of thing is due to lawyers who are not ready to go on with their job, lawyers who are not connected with the department. They are the group who are most responsible for the delays in the unsatisfied judgment fund.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Attorney-General and I can come to an agreement that I make my speech now and he make his later, then I am sure all hon. members will be satisfied with that arrangement.

I say that there have been extensive delays in dealing with that branch of his department and it means that, in many cases, actions are not tried for perhaps a year or a year and a half or up to two years. I myself have had that very experience in dealing with the unsatisfied judgment fund solicitors.

I want to tell the hon. Attorney-General about another area of delay in that very department. It seems that, when an offer of settlement is made so that a case need not go to trial, it has to go before some committee that he has constituted—I believe called the treasury committee—where they have to approve the settlement.

I do not know who constitutes that treasury committee, but I do know this, that it takes a great period of time for that committee, which he has constituted, to decide upon the merits of the amount that perhaps might be agreed upon between the two parties.

And frequently, it is the case that where the limits of the unsatisfied judgment fund are $10,000 for one person—and it seems unquestionably equitable and just that a plaintiff ought to get the maximum amount out of the unsatisfied judgment fund—that this committee has delayed in coming to that conclusion in order that judgment might be finally taken out, and the litigant then might pursue his application on into the unsatisfied judgment fund and get paid.

Now, I am not going to talk about the delays in the unsatisfied judgment fund because that comes under the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko). But we will come to his estimates no doubt in short order, where we may raise that.

But I merely say to the hon. Attorney-General—and I say it in a spirit of friendliness and with a wish to be of assistance—that, it seems in that branch of his department that the turnover is so great, that it has caused these extensive delays.

I am prepared, sir, to say that that comes from the fact that this department is not willing to pay a fair salary to the young solicitors who go into that branch of his department. In most cases, they are young solicitors, apparently, who have just come out of law school and seek that for some avenue or some experience in the field of litigation, perhaps, before they move on into some greener pastures of the legal profession.

That is all I wish to say about that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Reaume: Under this vote, I want to say a word for the staff of the department. First of all, I want to say that I have always found everyone in the department most kind. In every instance that I ever went into the offices, I want to say honestly that everyone there has been most fair and most kind, in every instance that I have had the opportunity of asking for favours or information. I think I can go so far as to say that the hon. Attorney-General has not been so bad either.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Essex North has not been in to see me.

Mr. Reaume: I will drop in.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the city from which I come, at the exit of the bridge and also at the entrance to it, over a holiday there are many, many thousands of cars going back to the United States, and it is also true of the tunnel. I am assuming it happens at Niagara Falls, and at Sarnia, too, probably.

Many of our officers of Windsor have to be called back on the job in order that we can handle car traffic going back over the river from various parts of the province.

Now, I am just wondering—this, of course, is expensive and the people of Windsor have to pay those bills—and I am just wondering if the hon. Attorney-General could not work out some kind of a deal with the people of Windsor and Sarnia and the other places in order that the Ontario provincial police—who indeed are a grand force—might help direct this traffic which just literally blocks our whole city.

Now, as I say, it is a great expense, and I was just wondering if the province could not assume part of those costs. Perhaps there is something the hon. Attorney-General might do in connection with this matter.

Now, the other point, sir, that I want to mention is this.

Windsor has on the police commission, a magistrate, a Crown attorney and a mayor. Now, first of all, I want to be brief, but I want to get down to the point.

I think that magistrates should not sit on any of these boards, because indeed, they deal with the officer affected, or the officer in court as a witness, and then they again deal with him as his boss, as a member of a commission.

And now, there certainly is no reason, of course, to have a Crown attorney sit as a member of the board. I suppose that Windsor probably is the only city in the province where the Crown attorney actually sits as a member of that board.

Now, if there ever was any reason for him being on there, it was only that he might, I think, get extra money in order to bring his salary up to the point where the hon. Attorney-General thinks it ought to be.

There may have been at one time, if he was placed there for the purpose of finding if there was any wrong-doing within the ranks of the police department of Windsor, but certainly that is a long time ago. While I am on that subject, I just want to say this word, that the Windsor force—from the chief right down—is one of the best forces, I think, in the province. They should not be subjected to having the Crown attorney sit there—for, after all, he cross-examines them in the witness box and then, in the very next hour, the very same man sits on their pension cases, on their hourly wage or monthly wage or whatever it happens to be. I am wondering if the hon. Attorney-General might not give that some thought.

The magistrate, too, is much in a similar spot, I think as the Crown attorney, and I am wondering if he might not give some thought first of all, in the instance of Windsor, to removing the Crown attorney from the commission, and then broadening out and giving more thought to the possible chances of taking magistrates in the province off the commission.

Now indeed, the hon. Attorney-General may, in the large areas, appoint 5 men if he wishes. I think that a judge, of course, ought to be on, a county court judge. The mayor of the community, indeed, ought to be there. But I think that the hon. Attorney-General could appoint representatives, if you will—respectable people of the area—who might sit as members of that board of commission, either 5 or even to 3 if he wishes.

Interjections by some hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: Well, I am not going into that, because I am asking the hon. Attorney-General for a favour. If I should say that all they ever appoint to any job is the man who once ran as a Tory, I might make him mad, and that is not what I am trying to do.

I intend after a while trying that, but I am going to try this one first. I shall try to get this favour, and after I have received that, then in the next hour or so I will try to make him mad.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I appreciate what my hon. friend has said. We only have, I think, one Crown attorney as a member of a police commission anywhere in Ontario, and there was a reason—as the hon. member mentioned—at the time. We have experimented, in a very small way so far, in appointing other than magistrates to the third position. As a matter of fact, legislation was enacted a few years ago to permit that, and I think it is a little early to determine how wise or otherwise that is, but it is being tried out.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if, in the main office during the past year, he has employed any new staff. If he has, have they gone through the procedure of going to the civil service commission?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes, they were all appointed through the commission. Yes, from time to time. The word "new" means new appointees. Yes, as there would bound to be in a department of that size. They have all gone through the commission, according to the requirements governing each case.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): No casual employees?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Not that I know of.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, to get back to the previous question, what would the hon. Attorney-General regard as an ideal set-up on a police commission? We have the mayor, and judge and the magistrate. What does he think of that set-up?

Mr. Reaume: Is the chief of police on the commission?

Mr. Thomas: No, the magistrate.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not think that would be possible. However, we have had quite a survey made, and I think there is a pretty general feeling still in this province, at any rate, that we have to be very careful in moving to improve on the present system.

Now, I know the different feeling of other areas about it, and the very criticism that the hon. member for Essex North brought up is certainly one of the elements to consider.

But, as against that there are certain other angles concerning which we have to be pretty careful.

Actually, I think our survey, that we made a short time ago, seemed to still favour generally speaking, the present system as being preferable to any so-called improvement. That does not mean that we are adhering to it entirely, we are trying here and there to see what could be the effects of a third member who does not hold a position of magistrate. It might indicate a better set-up.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter that I would like to raise with respect to vote 201.

I would like to request that the hon. Attorney-General and his department give some consideration, in the coming year, to the problem of small claims and the collection of small claims.

I am not speaking merely about small debts, although those are included. But I am talking about the general problem which would also include claims for damages.

From my observation of matters that have come to me, in my relatively short term as a member of the Legislature, there is quite a serious difficulty for a person who may have what appears to be quite a valid claim for a sum of money such as $50.

To him, this may be quite a significant sum of money, as it would be to me.

But it is not worth his while pursuing the matter, because even if he did win his case, most of the money he would collect would be used up in various costs involved in collecting it.

Now, I realize that this is by no means a simple problem, I know that we already have some legislation dealing with the collection of small debts. But I believe that it is possible, or might be possible—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Does my hon. friend talk about jurisdiction? Actually, it has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. Bryden: Well, where should I bring it up then?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I expect the legal offices, if anywhere, I would think would be the place for it.

Vote 201 agreed to.

On vote 202:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, on vote 202, before you carry that, I would just like to say concerning the work of preparing the revised statutes of Ontario—and here in this department we have the legislative counsel, Mr. MacTavish, Mr. Alcombrack, and Mr. Stone the registrar for regulations—that I am assured by the counsel that the material will have been printed and proclaimed in force and distributed by December 31, 1960, for the revised statutes 1960. It will be a 5-volume set, the same as in 1950 with approximately the same number of pages.

About 3,000 of these sets will be printed, and as soon as this project has been completed, that of the revision, the consolidation of the regulations will follow immediately. It is the expectation of legislative counsel, and the registrar of regulations, that it will be completed by mid-summer of 1961.

Mr. Sopha: It is with respect to the regulations that I should like to voice a little complaint.

Now, in 1950—I think with the assistance of Professor Finkelman, it occurs to me that he has something to do with it—a set of the consolidated regulations of Ontario were published, and they included all the regulations passed under the multitudinous number of statutes up to that time.

But, Mr. Chairman, after that time—I think I am absolutely certain in saying this—there was never any consolidation of all the regulations passed by the various government departments. Whereas, with the statutes, after they are revised and as they were in 1950, if one wants to see the amendment made or revisions made from year to year—as all hon. members will know—there is a volume published by Cartwright called, The Ontario Statute Citor.

If hon. members pick up this loose-leaf volume then they can see, up to any particular time, just what amendments were made to the statutes.

But an entirely different situation exists with respect to the regulations, and all this Citator will tell them is that certain regulations, and it will number them, have been passed under a specific statute, and it will give them the number of that regulation in the Ontario Gazette.

Mr. Chairman, just no one other than a librarian, that I know of, keeps these Ontario Gazettes which are published, I believe, once weekly, and which no doubt after the accumulation of a year would make a file 3 feet high. Even if people did have them, they would have to thumb through them to find these regulations.

To get down to real terms it means this—and the best way to illustrate what I have to say is to tell of an experience that I had.

I had a person come to me bearing a summons which resulted from information having been sworn, and it said on its face that this person was charged that he did repair a motor vehicle without being the holder of a licence under some statute, the name of which I forget—whatever statute it is that requires people who repair motor vehicles, to take out licences—and it said that he had repaired this motor vehicle contrary to regulation No. 8 made under this statute.

Now, looking around my office, and looking around the library at the court-house I found it was just impossible to find that regulation so that I could read what the terms of the regulation were, which required this individual to take out a licence.

Now, I notice that the legislative library takes all the pages out of the Ontario Gazette that have regulations passed under statutes, and they bind them. That is the only place where I have ever seen any consolidation of regulations made, and there must be perhaps more than a thousand—I am just guessing—made each year.

That meant in this case, Mr. Chairman, when I was unable to find what this regulation entailed, I had to wait until we got to court on the morning on which this charge was going to be heard, and wait for the inspector appointed under the Act, whom I knew would have a copy of the regulation, and go up and ask him to show me the regulation which requires a person under this statute to take out a licence to repair motor vehicles.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think merely to state that shows what an unsalutary situation that is. I say this because, if we are to be governed by law, one of the fundamental principles is that the law should be made known in ready fashion to the person who must obey it—and above all to the person who is charged with committing a breach of it.

Now, to get back to where I began, which is always a good place to get back to, Mr. Chairman, as I say in 1950 they consolidated these regulations in the consolidated regulations of 1950. But nowhere during the 10 years, Mr. Chairman, after that time did this department publish any volume, of which I am aware, containing all the regulations passed under the many statutes.

That becomes to me exceedingly important when the powers of government devolve into the hands of various boards and commissions, and into the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor himself, or the cabinet which is given power to make regulations, in order to carry into effect the intents and purposes of the Act.

I would suggest that immediately these consolidated regulations are published next year—that thereafter, from year to year, a volume be published containing all the regulations made in each year under all of the statutes. It could be something in the nature, perhaps, of the Ontario Statute Citator, which was published by a law firm in the city, and which gives ready reference to the revisions and amendments of the statutes themselves.

That I think would be in order, in this day and age, as the powers of government increase and widen, Mr. Chairman. I suggest very sincerely, to the hon. Attorney-General, that this course of action ought to commend itself to him so that the public, lawyers, laymen—and those who are interested in any particular field of government—will be able to resort to a specific volume and see what regulations have been passed under it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) was 8 months, at least, ahead of the hon. member for Sudbury in bringing this matter very clearly to my attention, and to the registrar's attention. I would suggest to the hon. member for Sudbury that, while he is here, he go and have a good talk with the registrar and see exactly how he is handling this.

I do not pretend to know enough about the details to give them here at this moment. But I assure the hon. member that the registrar has what he thinks is as efficient a system as he can work out.

If the hon. member can give him better suggestions, we will certainly consider them, and I would hope that the starting point again next year, when they are consolidated again, would be a very good time to put into effect anything that can improve on the present system.

But I do know that there are volumes well beyond the last one that he mentioned, because I have them, and I have had to wrestle with them myself at times. But I do not know whether he can get a better solution than the one that Mr. Stone has worked out. If he can, Mr. Stone is the type of man who would be only too glad to take advantage of any suggestions that the hon. member makes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, before you carry this particular vote, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General whether any consideration has been given to the possibility of recording all board decisions at this central office? If there be no central office, then I ask whether any consideration has been given to the establishment of a central office?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is the hon. leader of the Opposition referring to the municipal board specifically?

Mr. Wintermeyer: No, not specifically. The hon. Attorney-General recalls the Gordon committee made reference to the fact that—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, actually up to this moment I would say that I have not given that careful study at all. There is at the present time a method of reporting the decisions of the municipal board and they are being published. But the more general problem than that will certainly be given careful consideration.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, would it come under the hon. Attorney-General's jurisdiction? Will it be his responsibility to organize this particular registry?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I think one would have to consider what board we are talking about.

Mr. Wintermeyer: All the boards, Mr. Chairman, all the boards.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: But I have not jurisdiction over all the boards by any means. But it might be that this department would be the place for it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I think there must be one central office. There should be, and obviously we already have certain facilities for regulations. Now might be an excellent time to expand the particular registry to include all board decisions.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I can assure my hon. friend that there will be careful consideration given to that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, well, all right. Fine. I must point out emphatically—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: After all, we have been busy since the House opened here, and those reports are only one of a lot of things I have been working on.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I do not want to take unnecessary time, but there is no point in our acting wholly politically in all these things. The Gordon committee made an excellent point. It is absolutely essential for the government that the decisions be recorded. This government has the responsibility of pursuing that report just as expeditiously as possible.

This is one particular department that could administer the new agency, and I suggest that it be done as quickly as possible. I do not want the traditional report that we are going to take it under advisement or we are going to think about it.

We have spent $90,000, I think, thus far, but that money will be wasted unless the report is implemented in its good features. Certainly one of the features is the establishment of a central recording system and, unless it be done in the course of the next year, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that the report has been vitiated in one of its primary requisites.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Attorney-General. Item No. 1 of vote 202 mentions salaries, $68,000; item No. 2, maintenance $353,000. This is the only instance in the estimates where maintenance exceeds salary. Is there—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The reason for that is that the cost of the revision of the statutes is in that figure. I understand $350,000 of that $353,000 is for revision of the statutes.

Vote 202 agreed to.

On vote 203:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, under vote 203, traffic safety programme, I wish to say something in this field. We have a small, but I think very useful, branch working on this subject distinct from the police, who, of course, do a lot of work as well. It is on vote 203 that I want to make these remarks. Here we have Mr. Silk and Inspectors Witts, Wilson, and Mr. Rolph Eng, as well as a small secretarial staff working in this branch.

Speaking generally on traffic safety, co-ordinated effort is being made to cope with the situation. No doubt a good deal will be said on this same subject when the hon. Minister of Transport presents his estimates. And probably, too, the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) will have something to say in relation to his own department.

I expect also that the new hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) will be giving a good deal of thought to the many duties and obligations on the part of those charged with the responsibility of the education of our youth, to inculcate in them habits and understanding which will stand them in good stead in society in their adult days as drivers of motor vehicles.

The death toll on the roads of Ontario appalls me, as I am sure it appalls every hon. member in this House. Certainly this applies to everyone occupying any similar position in every state and province, with any comparable population and motor car registration to that of our own, no matter where we go on the North American continent.

I cannot imagine that the people of this province want any let-up in the efforts to achieve safety on our highways. Personally, after some years now of very intimate connection with the problem, I can see no appreciable solution that is not accompanied by strict discipline, sound rules and obedience to them.

If I could be permitted to be a little axiomatic on the subject, I would say the best rule of highway traffic safety is embodied in the axiom—or perhaps we could even call it a theorem—that the greater the intensity and determination to solve the problem at the local level, the better the result will be.

From a statistical standpoint, the safest cities in Canada in 1959 were Sarnia; Brantford; Medicine Hat, Alberta; Verdun, Quebec; and Trail, British Columbia—and the town of Bowmanville has started into its fatality-free fifth year.

The Ontario provincial police force stands ready to assist, in every helpful manner, the local authorities and the local organizations, if only they will band themselves together to make a greater effort. The same thing can be said of our police forces generally.

Our government here in Ontario has certainly continued to lead, not only in advocating safety, but in providing ways and means of furthering that worthy objective.

I would like to repeat, because it still stands, what I said on March 17 last, when I introduced my estimates for the current year, and I quote:

I wish that the whole automotive industry and affiliated trades and the insurance field would take a good look at what we, at the provincial level, have done, and match our efforts dollar for dollar—a lot more could then be done.

I am not accusing these people of falling down, but since they constitute the most responsible of all persons for the conditions, I am not at all convinced that they have yet reached the apex in the assumption of their responsibilities in the drive for safety on this continent. The automobile manufacturers continue to spend—and I would repeat this and emphasize it—the automobile manufacturers continue to spend far more proportionately of their safety dollars in the United States than they do in Canada.

In fact, I think we could say that none of us ever do enough to be able to sit back and congratulate ourselves.

I am very happy to say to this House that, as far as the roads patrolled by the Ontario provincial police in 1960 for January and February are concerned, we show a substantial reduction in fatalities. The total killed in January and February of this year is 67, as against 87 in the two months January and February of last year.

But here in my hand are the reports which came to my desk of the 30 killed in February, and this is just a sample of what is going on all the time. I do not know how on earth we are ever going to stop this slaughter unless people at the local level are going to get together and see that it is not going to happen in their areas.

Listen to the age group of these 30. Two between 1 and 5 years of age; 5 between 6 and 12; 4 between 13 and 18; 8 between 19 and 28; 5 between 29 and 49; and 6 of age 50 and over. Two-thirds of the number killed last month were under 30 years of age.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, we cannot pat ourselves on the back, we are not entitled to take honours or to take awards, as long as this sort of thing goes on. But I do hope that every hon. member will continue to do all he can to try to improve the situation.

The traffic safety office of this department has, as its primary function, the promotion of traffic court clinics and other activities in the field of safety, as well as filling many speaking engagements on safety courses, lectures and talks before school audiences. The office is fast becoming a source of information, assistance and advice on matters pertaining to the many facets of the traffic problem.

The work, of course, is concentrated on the enforcement aspects of traffic safety.

May I, before I sit down on that particular vote, go back to what the hon. member for Nipissing asked, and I did not at the time quite understand his question. He referred to the term "telemeter television" and asked about The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act.

I think perhaps what he was referring to is something like a laundromatic machine which will operate and wash clothes if one puts 50 cents in it any day of the week.

When Sarnia had a prosecution under The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act, it took place with respect to an operation of a laundromatic, but it was held to be legal. It is under appeal at the present time.

Whether the same thinking applies in the other case, I am not prepared to say. But apparently what the hon. member was talking about is something that probably would be under my department.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, dealing with this vote 203 in the traffic safety programme, there are two or three points which occur to me on which I would like an answer from the hon. Attorney-General.

He mentioned in his remarks that The Department of Transport, The Department of Highways and The Department of Education also do some work in traffic safety. And I wonder why it is important that 4 different departments all apparently cover part of the same work. Should there, and could there, not be greater efficiency—and perhaps better traffic control safety—if there was either one group or the 4 groups working all together? Has that consideration been looked into, and how far along have we come on it?

While I appreciate the seriousness of the hon. Attorney-General's remarks and the importance of the traffic safety programme—with the problem becoming more and more serious every year—there is another point which makes me wonder. Why are the estimates down from $60,000 last year to $40,000 for this year?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, of course, The Department of Transport was formed a few years ago, really as a direct result of this problem—I think I can say a direct result, although it deals with licencing as well on a broader scale. Since that department was formed it has taken over in its field the major part of licencing and examining, and all that sort of thing, and a fair amount of the actual steps for safety. But it was felt, on review, that the type of work that we are doing in the enforcement branch allotted to this particular item, vote 203, could be reduced, because I think the hon. members will find that The Department of Transport is continuing to expand in the same field.

Mr. Singer: But, where the hon. Attorney-General has reduced it from last year, he has reduced it in grants to safety councils by $15,000, advertising, and stationery, printing and maintenance. Those are where the 3 are.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, actually, on the safety council, the Ontario safety council itself has taken on the main responsibility for organizing and dealing with safety councils directly. It gets a grant from the government, and is working in close association with The Department of Transport.

Actually, I think we have something like 60 safety councils now, as against 40 a year or a little more than a year ago, and they are growing. But I would like to see them grow even faster.

Mr. Singer: What about the co-ordination of the various safety groups in the 3 or 4 departments?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, my hon. friend has brought up a reasonable point. But I would point out, in the field of enforcement, that there is very definitely a close tie-up with certain factors of safety, the use of the police, and the attendance at schools. They do a great deal where the uniformed officers are a very important factor in matters of that sort. We feel that we are serving a very useful purpose in this particular little branch, and I think it is well worth any money that is spent on it, up to the amount of this allowance.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, may I just say a word, because The Department of Transport has been mentioned. I think, Mr. Chairman, the co-ordination between the various departments can be highlighted in the approach that we had to the increase in speeds across the province of Ontario on certain highways. That came really under the jurisdiction of, or was guided by, a co-ordinating committee made up of the enforcement people from

The Department of the Attorney-General, the engineers of The Department of Highways, and representatives of The Department of Transport. These groups formed, for that purpose, an excellent co-ordinating committee to bring about the increases in speeds on certain of the highways. That is just an example of the co-ordination that is done.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, in the township of Saltfleet, which forms a part of my riding, we have 6 or 7 very bad main line railway crossings. At one of them, the railroad crossing at Winona, last year there were 6 people killed in one accident, and there have been 10 killed in the past 3 years at the same crossing.

The Winona men's club have been quite concerned with the problem presented by this crossing, and have been trying to do something about it.

I would like to ask a question—I believe it would be a legal question because they have pursued it and have not to my knowledge at the present time had an answer—and to phrase the question right, I would like to quote from an article in the Hamilton Spectator of January of this year:

Railways are not responsible for placing advance warning signs on roads leading to level crossings, according to a letter received here from the Canadian National Railways' legal department. The railway suggests that the responsibility rests with highway departments or with the municipalities concerned. The letter is from the railway to the board of transport commissioners.

However, a copy was sent to the secretary of the Winona men's club following protest by the club against the lack of adequate signs on side-road crossings and Canadian National Railways main-line tracks running from Hamilton to Niagara Falls.

In a brief prepared last month, the club committee told of rusty and damaged signs, some hidden by hedges and others lying in ditches, and some signs missing altogether. One sign faced the wrong way, and another was tied to a hydro pole by a length of rope.

Copies of the brief were sent to the Canadian National Railways, the board of transport commissioners, and to Saltfleet township council.

The club's decision to investigate the crossing follows a series of fatal accidents in recent years.

I have mentioned the particular one. I go on to quote:

The question of advance warning signs was brought up at the inquest into last year's fatal crash. No one seemed to know who had originally placed the signs, now either missing or in a dilapidated condition.

Legal opinions were sought as to where responsibility rested for placing advance warning signs. Lawyers advised that any one erecting highway signs was responsible for their maintenance, and could be held liable if a sign was knocked down or damaged and an accident resulted.

Saltfleet was advised the township was not required by law to erect warning signs.

I would like to have an answer or some comment as to just where this sort of responsibility lies, so that either one jurisdiction or the other would look after the situation.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Perhaps if the hon. Minister of Highways would see fit to do so, he could give a more detailed answer than I can.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, there are a great many instances on the roads of Ontario of signs in the condition mentioned in that letter, I might tell the hon. member for Wentworth East, other than those in that particular area.

On the King's highways and provincial highways, the responsibility for signing is that of The Department of Transport and The Department of Highways, and I think, by and large, that responsibility is lived up to.

On the other roads which do not form part of the provincial highways system—namely, city, town and village streets, county roads and township roads—the responsibility is entirely that of the local authority. It is true that they do so with the guidance, and in some cases the authority, of The Department of Transport, and it is true that a certain amount of the cost of that signing, original installation and maintenance, is subsidized by The Department of Highways. But the primary responsibility lies with the local authorities.

I would like to say this, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member for Wentworth East, and to all the hon. members who have the same problem. Over a period of years recently, this is a problem which has received a considerable amount of attention by the local authorities, and by the district municipal engineers under whose wing the local road superintendents and engineers work.

I would think that, in most instances, these are very unsatisfactory conditions, because I am quite sure that, in many of the smaller roads, that is the case. These unsatisfactory conditions are being remedied, but the first and original move is up to the local municipality and its council.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, the point then is that if the municipality does erect the signs, they are responsible for the maintenance. I know definitely that, when the original problem arose, one of the councillors said that they were not going to erect the warning signs because they would have the responsibility of paying for their upkeep.

I certainly think that there should be something mandatory about warning signs. If a municipality cannot afford to do so and merely says, "We are not going to put them up because we would have to keep them in good shape and it is going to cost money," then certainly I think it should be law, it should be mandatory, that proper signs be put up and kept in condition by someone.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Attorney-General mentioned about the responsibility of the automotive industry in respect to highway safety, and I detected by what he said he was a little critical of the support received from them.

The presidents of General Motors, and of the Chrysler Company, and of the Ford Company, are reputed to be very busy men. I doubt very much if they have time, sometimes, to read the newspaper, so I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General would send them a copy of his speech here this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would be glad to. I have been in communication with them in the past, and I will be glad to do this again.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, it may be that this is not the proper place to ask this question. But, in the matter of highway safety, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General whether or not any legislation is proposed with respect to school buses—and what I am thinking of is the training of school bus drivers in particular. I understand that there are no regulations with respect to the qualifications which a school bus driver must have. It may be that this comes under some other department.

I would also like to know whether or not any legislation is proposed. The hon. Attorney-General mentioned that we are lagging behind some parts of the United States in the matter of safety—at least, I took that from his remarks—and I understand over there they do have regulations in many of the states requiring vehicles to stop while approaching a stopped school bus from either direction. I would like to know whether or not anything is proposed.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, actually, that will be for the hon. Minister of Transport to deal with. But I can tell the hon. member that it has been very carefully considered, and I am quite aware of the survey that my hon. friend refers to. In fact, I was looking at a digest the other day, and I think it is correct to say that, in practically all jurisdictions in the United States, there are some restrictions in meeting a stopped school bus, as well as the complete stopping when overtaking one.

Yes, the latest recommendation is that of the coroner's in the Hillsburgh case in Erin township, here in our own province.

Vote 203 agreed to.

On vote 204:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very short on this vote 204: The supreme court judges of Ontario are 31 in number, of whom 10, including the chief justice, constitute the court of appeal; there are 21 trial judges including the chief justice of the high court, the trial division.

Most of the judges are now using the dictating equipment, and the judges' staff are trained in the use of it. The practice instituted a few years ago of having two legal secretaries—one for each of the chief justices, and available for each of the 4 divisions—has been continued.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, in conjunction with this, I would ask the hon. Attorney-General whether, in his opinion, there are a sufficient number of trial and appeal court judges in Ontario at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My answer to that would be yes, as far as the appeal division is concerned. Regarding the trial division, I had the opportunity of discussing the matter with the chief justice of the high court, and he felt that the number is sufficient. He made some observations in relation to certain other things, including the accommodation and so forth. But I think it probably would be correct to answer yes, the number of those judges is sufficient at the present time, although, of course, the province is growing.

Vote 204 agreed to.

On vote 205:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, on that vote I have no particular comments to make, except to say that Mr. Marriott is the responsible officer in this vote, and that the Bill No. 82, a Mechanics Lien Bill, going through the House at the present time, would have some bearing on the procedures in his office.

Vote 205 agreed to.

On vote 206:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 206 is the vote on the registrar of the supreme court, and I would just say a few words on this.

The work of the office, according to the report of the registrar, has been increasing steadily over the last few years. The year ending December 31, 1959, was the biggest year in the experience of the office. The number of writs of summons issued each year, and the number of actions sent down for trial at Toronto, gives some indication of the rate of increase. Mr. Charles Smythe is the registrar, and he is present at this time.

Between the years 1954 and 1959, the number of writs of summons issued increased by 70 per cent., and the number of actions sent down for trial in the supreme court of Ontario, over that same period, increased about 35 per cent.

Generally speaking, a similar increase occurred in the work of the court of appeals office and the weekly court office.

In the circuit court office, during the period, the work increased by about 20 per cent.

For the first month and a half of the year 1960, I am told that there has been a further 28 per cent. increase in the issue of writs, and about the same in the number of trials sent down, action sent down for trial, over the corresponding period of a year ago.

In 1959 there were 17,142 writs of summons issued in the supreme court of Ontario, of which 3,372 were for divorces. The peak year for divorce writs was 1957; the year 1959 was not far off in number of writs issued in this field as compared with 1957, but the number is somewhat less.

Vote 206 agreed to.

On vote 207:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 207; this vote concerns the supreme court reporters.

Mr. Taylor retired during the year, after a long and distinguished service as senior court reporter, and he has been replaced by Mr. Frank Luet. This branch is composed of the chief reporter, 20 supreme court reporters, and 1 part-time clerk.

The members of the staff attend and report the proceedings of the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario which numbers 21 judges, at the 48 county and district seats throughout the province at which sittings are held.

Apart from Toronto, where there are normally 5, and sometimes 6, judges sitting on jury and non-jury work through the length of the court year, the sittings of the supreme court vary in number from two per year—in the case of some of the less populous counties and districts—to almost continuous sittings in the more populous counties and districts.

I would not want to overlook Sudbury and other parts of the north, because I think there is a fair amount of supreme court work there, too.

Trials of actions in the supreme court may vary in length from an hour or less to several weeks.

During the past year, there have been several trials which have taken 25 or more days, the longest having lasted a total of 38 days, during which time over 5,000 pages of evidence and arguments were reported.

During the course of the past year, the members of this staff have travelled over 100,000 miles to attend and report the proceedings of the trial division of the supreme court. During this time, they have reported approximately 100 million words in shorthand.

In order to alleviate the serious shortage of competent reporters for the courts of the province in the coming year, it is hoped to set up a training programme for student reporters. Over a course of years, this programme will provide junior reporters able to start out in the lower courts of the province and, as their experience grows and their ability increases, will create a pool of competent and qualified reporters for the supreme court reporting staff. Their services should be increasingly available to fill openings, due to resignation or increase in the staff, because of our constantly increasing population and the expanding economy of the province.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General whether he controls the price per page paid for a transcript of evidence as charged by the supreme court reporters.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Regulations from time to time are passed dealing with that subject and setting the rates. I think the latest one was passed last year, was it not? The last change was made about a year and a half ago.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, in respect of this vote, I should like to take the opportunity to pay tribute to the very competent and co-operative staff of the supreme court reporters, with whom it has been my pleasure to deal while I was busy with litigation in the courts. They are indeed a fine group and their measure of willingness to be helpful to civil litigants and accused persons goes beyond that which words can express.

However, having said that by way of preface, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the hon. Attorney-General that a very unsatisfactory situation exists, with respect to the price charged for a transcript of evidence for the purposes of appeal.

Now, I think I am correct in saying, sir, that the price per page is around 80 cents, whereas it was formerly 65 cents.

I think there was an increase within the last year, and they now charge 80 cents a page for a folio of about 100 words, perhaps up to 150 words.

Now, this means in real terms, Mr. Chairman, that when an accused person, let us say in a criminal case, desires to prosecute an appeal if he feels aggrieved by the conviction imposed upon him in the trial court, he has to muster something in the neighbourhood of $200, $300 or $400, or even as high as $500, in order to pay for the transcript of evidence.

Now, in saying that, I wish to pay tribute to the hon. Attorney-General and his department, insofar as legal aid cases are concerned—where accused persons are defended by lawyers under the system of legal aid which is administered by the law society. It is a common experience that The Attorney-General's Department will provide the transcript of evidence, and they have been more than helpful to people who are recipients of legal aid in that regard.

But notwithstanding that, Mr. Chairman, I say to the hon. Attorney-General that, if justice is to be fair, then it must be fairly cheap. In a great majority of cases, I dare say, people who are accused of serious crimes, for some reason or other—and there appears to be a high correlation in this regard—are people who are ill able to afford the expense involved in prosecuting an appeal.

Consequently, a very great difficulty exists when after the trial is held and the person has been found guilty, he must try to get together the $200 or $300 necessary to pay the supreme court reporter in order to obtain a transcript of evidence. Such evidence, I point out, is an absolute fundamental necessity before one may go into the appeal court.

Now, I would think the sum of $137,000, which is being asked to be voted by this Legislature, would give a moderate income to these persons. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that consideration be given to increasing the salaries paid by the province, in order that a commensurate reduction in the price of the transcript may result. In this way, in future the transcripts could become readily available to people, who wish to prosecute and appeal, at a very moderate cost. But I do not for a moment suggest that they should have the transcript for nothing.

In the same regard one frequently sees in the Toronto Globe and Mail, in the Osgoode Hall reports, where a person has appealed from his sentence. In many cases, he is not represented by counsel at the trial at all, and the appeal is dismissed because no transcript of the evidence is available.

Well, it would seem to follow with logic that, if the person could not afford a lawyer in the first place to defend him, he certainly cannot afford to pay for the transcript of evidence.

So I would suggest, in that regard, that consideration might be given to the supplying of transcripts to people who wish to appeal the sentence that they have received in one of the inferior courts.

But I do say, by way of underscoring this, that a very unsatisfactory situation does exist with respect to the heavy expense that devolves upon litigants in obtaining transcripts of evidence from these reporters.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I am asking the Deputy Attorney-General to see that this matter is discussed again at one of our regular meetings of the advisory committee. Actually, when it was discussed the last time, they felt that these rates were fair.

However, we have on that committee such well-known defence counsel as Gregory Evans of Timmins, and perhaps the hon. member for Sudbury will have a chance to talk to him about it before we have the next meeting.

Vote 207 agreed to.

On vote 208:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 208 is in relation to master of titles, and Mr. Magwood is the master.

In 1959 there were 775 plans checked for accuracy, and in 1960 the figure is likely to be considerably higher. Microfilming continues to the extent of some 200,000 instruments, making it possible to destroy last year some 120,000 instruments, and at the present time all current documents are microfilmed as registered. The master of titles claims that the Toronto office of land titles has the lowest per capita cost of any lands system in Canada.

Vote 208 agreed to.

On vote 209:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The director of titles is also Mr. Magwood.

Vote 209 agreed to.

On vote 210:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, on vote 210, the Attorney-General's laboratory, I would say that, in 1959, this laboratory took part in over 2,000 cases, which included most of the important criminal cases in the province.

These cases necessitated over 150,000 miles of travel by the 18 qualified laboratory experts. The number of cases requiring detailed scientific examinations increased by 15 per cent.

The laboratory facilities were expanded to provide for greater detail in firearms and document cases.

The number of laboratory alcohol analyses in traffic cases decreased by 22 per cent. in 1959—due to the success, Dr. Ward-Smith says, of the breathalyzer programme. There are now approximately 100 breathalyzer operators in the province, and 30 breathalyzer units in operation.

This programme is under the supervision of the laboratory, and the laboratory experts attend court when required.

The laboratory personnel are taking part in the instructional programmes for law enforcement officers and coroners, to improve the efficiency of this aspect of the administration of justice in the province.

As a result of these instructional programmes, and partly as a result of a trend in law enforcement, the work of the laboratory thus far in 1960 increased 40 per cent. over a comparable period in 1959. There are some 60 regional pathologists across the province available for medical-legal autopsies and so forth.

Our forensic laboratory is regarded as one of the top 3 laboratories of its kind on the continent. It has contributed significantly to the advance of this branch of science. The evidence developed is being received by both Crown and defence attorneys, and figures importantly on both sides of these cases.

The laboratory staff are excellently qualified and trained, and are taking part in the teaching of their specialties at the university level in pathology, toxicology, pharmacy, and law.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Attorney-General what sort of turnover in staff the crime laboratory has experienced in the past 12-month period.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The turnover has been quite low. There have been some additions to the staff, and I think the latest addition is an expert coming from India, if I remember rightly. I think the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has also recently made arrangements for the use of the laboratory for an important job in the field of health.

Mr. Singer: Has the turnover been on the senior level because some of the senior employees have found better positions with higher salaries?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There have been two who have gone over to the United States, but I do not think we have had any difficulty in replacement.

Mr. Singer: How long has it been since a salary evaluation has been done for the crime laboratory?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There is a survey at the present time proceeding before the civil service commission.

Mr. Singer: Is it being done by the civil service commission? Are they engaging any experts to get comparative salary scales, say between this jurisdiction and some of the leading states in the United States—Michigan, or Pennsylvania, or Ohio?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I do not know the inner workings of the commission with respect to such a case. But, from some of the recommendations I have seen recently, I think they are taking into account a whole lot of things. There seems to be a fair movement forward in their recommendations.

Mr. Singer: Insofar as the breathalyzer is concerned, Mr. Chairman, in view of the very substantial work being done apparently by the crime laboratory, has the hon. Attorney-General any comments to offer at this time as to whether or not the province perhaps intends to get into, or investigate further, the system that presently pertains in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On the question of breathalizers—

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: —and the relationship of the cancellation of the licence? I repeat what I said a year ago, that I do not think they have the slightest intention of going into that particular field.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would have the utmost misgivings for this reason: The criminal code of Canada provides certain protections for accused persons. An accused person does not have to take the box, and if the accused person does not take the box, then no comment can be made on that fact. I think that is very fundamental to our plan of justice.

I myself years ago did a lot of defence work. I was a defence counsel myself. I would rather speak for the accused person, and I would say that it is fundamental, in our way of justice, that the accused person should be afforded the protections that have grown up in our system of justice over hundreds of years.

The breathalyzer and the blood-testing methods and so on are all used on the basis that, if a person does not want to take those things then, according to the criminal code, it is not necessary that they should do so. I think that is fundamentally correct.

Now, the great problem that I see with the Saskatchewan legislation is this: That a provincial government circumvents what are the sound rules of criminal practice.

Now, it is true that the supreme court of Canada upheld that, on the grounds of a public necessity—perhaps I might put it that way—control of the highways. As for myself, I would want a lot of persuading before I would agree to the circumventing of the protections that are afforded an accused person.

Furthermore—and I do not want to offend against these experts in the crime laboratory and so on—I feel personally that there is no mechanical system which can say that, because a person has so much alcohol in his bloodstream, or so much alcohol on his breath, that this makes it fundamental that he is intoxicated.

I would say this, sir, that there are all sorts of people who have greater tolerances than other people. I think that it could be a matter of very, very grave injustice if we were to compel a certain individual to take a blood test—or a blood count or whatever it may be—and, on the strength of that, say that person was intoxicated.

Actually speaking, there is not any alternative or satisfactory substitute for the evidence that is taken in open court, and is subject to cross-examination, and is subject to the weighing of the matter, and the determining of the matter, by the court itself on those subjects.

To substitute some artificial method for saying that a person is or is not guilty, I must say personally, would give me the gravest misgivings, and I would want a lot more convincing than I have had at the present time.

I have looked at the Saskatchewan law, and I have also read the Gordon committee report. Now, I must say this to hon. members that I again have great misgivings in handing over the living and the liberty of subjects to an arbitrary decision of a board.

I think my hon. friend from York Centre had better look at that law and read it over, and then read it over in the light of the great protections that we have for accused persons in this province.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, while I can appreciate the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister, I cannot quite appreciate the casual wave of the hand that dismissed the great wealth of scientific evidence and scientific writing that abounds with researchers in this field, including the reports of traffic conferences, the reports of traffic experts, the reports of famous European authorities, American authorities, Canadian authorities, policemen, lawyers and so on.

I think the thing that cries out for attention in this province, as in other jurisdictions, is the horrible death toll that we see on our roads every day.

Three people are killed in Ontario on the roads every day, and probably one of those 3 is killed as a result of alcohol being involved in the misuse of automobiles in connection with the roads.

This is an emergency that cries out in my mind, Mr. Chairman, for emergency action. It is something for the general good that should be done.

While there may be certain built-in protections for the accused—and as a lawyer I think these are most important, I think I recognize the importance of these things as much as anyone—here is something where the public good, and the importance of the public good, far overwhelms, to my mind, some of the common and accepted approaches that we have had over the years. Therefore it is my opinion that we should take a very careful look at what other jurisdictions have done and what they have been able to achieve.

This is a field in which the European authorities have been experimenting for 20 or 30 years and have had a tremendous record of success. This is a field in which the noted criminologists, doctors and so on, have said there must be an answer approaching along these lines.

While it is true that oral evidence is of substantial value, I wonder how much value can be placed on the standard evidence of the policeman, which he gives in court, that a man's speech was thick, and that he staggered, and that his eyes were glassy. How much good is that evidence, really, when the policeman has fixed that evidence in his mind at the time he wrote it down, and very seldom if ever changes it?

There were a series of articles in the New Yorker magazine, not too long ago, dealing with the whole problem of alcohol. The writer of those articles has done very substantial research into the misuses and abuse of alcohol, as far back as the time of Hammurabi. Apparently the same tests were applied in Egypt a couple of thousand years ago when the test of drunkenness was whether the man's speech was thick and his eyes were glassy, and he staggered.

Well, surely, there must be some sense and some purpose in adopting modern proved scientific methods.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that we branch out on a brand new experiment that is going to infringe upon the rights of people before the bar of justice. I think we are rightly proud of our system of justice and we should do our best to maintain it. But here is an emergent situation, and I suggest, Mr. Chairman, the time has come in this province when we should begin to look at new measures to approach this.

Certainly our traffic record, our deaths on the highway every day are nothing to be proud of. I think we have to get at this in a new way.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I just say to my hon. friend from York Centre that I am very sympathetic to the point of view that there are emergencies in the situation; of course there are. One has only to listen to what the hon. Attorney-General has said to see the seriousness of the situation. But I point out to him that the necessities of the situation are no answer to possible very grave injustices, and that is what worries me about this thing.

It has often been said, as he will know, that it is better that a thousand guilty men go free than that one innocent man should be convicted. Now, that is the basis on which, over the years, we have approached the administration of criminal law.

The problem that I see with the Saskatchewan legislation is this. The criminal code of Canada puts submission to such tests on a voluntary basis. The person involved does not have to go into the box, he does not have to testify. He is not compelled to testify against himself, as it were, by reason of a blood test or a breath test if he does not want to. I think that is fundamentally fair and sound, and the minute we depart from it, we are getting into great difficulty.

Now, the trouble with the Saskatchewan legislation as I see it is just this, if the person exercises his rights that way, and does not take those tests, then he is penalized by the board who says: "Because you do not do this, we deprive you of your licence or we do something else." I cannot see it myself. I again have the gravest doubts in connection with that sort of thing.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Prime Minister not agree with his hon. Minister of Transport that there is no right to drive on the road, but that it is a privilege to drive on the road?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I agree with the hon. Minister of Transport. But I would say this, that the views I am expressing here—

Mr. MacDonald: They are out of date.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are not out of date at all. I am telling hon. members that there is no substitute for British justice.

Mr. MacDonald: They are out of date.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is no substitute for British justice.

Personally I am suspicious of these artificial things by which we can weigh human personality. I do not think we can do it. The fact is I know we cannot do it, and every hon. member in this assembly knows today that there are different tolerances of different individuals, and the minute we start to apply some rule or some test-tube method of finding out whether a person is or is not—

Mr. MacDonald: Just listen to some facts now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well now, I will tell the hon. member that I would—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I had thought that this matter would possibly come up under the estimates of The Department of Transport. But since it has come up here, more has to be said about it than has been said to date.

I think that the statement the hon. Prime Minister has just made, with all deference to him, confuses the issue completely.

First of all, I would emphasize the point that was made in some of the crossfire here that, surely the improper driving of a vehicle that may have 200 horsepower or more can be dangerous to life and limb. The driving of such a vehicle is not a right, it is a privilege that should be subject to certain conditions.

In fact, it is right now a privilege under the law, subject to certain conditions. A person has to operate the vehicle in a way that is not dangerous to the public in order to retain the privilege of driving.

The law of Saskatchewan, to which reference has been made, falls exactly within that category. The law does not say that if a man is charged with impaired driving, or drunk driving, he must take a breathalyzer test. What it says is that, when he applies for his licence, in order to get that licence he must accept the condition that, if he is so charged, he will take a breathalyzer test or else will lose his licence. That is a condition he accepts when he applies for the licence.

Mr. Grossman: That does not make it any better.

Mr. Bryden: It certainly does. He accepts that condition. This is an important distinction. It is a condition, and it is quite legitimate, I submit, in the driving of vehicles that are dangerous to other people, that those who wish the privilege should have to meet conditions laid down for the protection of the public, as is the case in many, many phases of our law right now.

Mr. Gisborn: Railway engines and hoisting equipment.

Mr. Bryden: In the operation of railway engines and hoisting equipment and in many fields, including the driving of motor vehicles, as the hon. member for Wentworth East has pointed out to me. It is fair and reasonable in view of the serious situation existing on our highways because of the mixing of alcohol and gasoline. Surely it is reasonable to lay down conditions of that kind, conditions imposed upon a person when he applies for a licence, if he wishes to exercise the privilege of driving a motor vehicle.

The hon. Prime Minister has stated that asking a man to take a breathalyzer test is in the same category as asking him to give evidence against himself.

I submit that it is in no different category from asking a man to permit his fingerprints to be taken. It is the same sort of thing, applying to an objective physical condition. There is no absolutely reliable way, but this is the most reliable way, of establishing whether or not a man is capable of driving a vehicle, or whether he has imbibed alcohol to the point where he is not capable.

It is true, as the hon. Prime Minister mentions, that to a certain degree it is an arbitrary test. The standard that is usually suggested is, I believe—and they should lay it down in the law—that a person may not drive a motor vehicle if he has a greater concentration of alcohol in his blood than—I am not sure how many zeroes go in here, but .05 per cent—

Mr. Sopha: No, 1.5 per cent.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, no, no. Well, at any rate I believe it is something involving 5, I think .5 or .05 per cent. That does not matter. There are experts who can and will give all sorts of evidence on that.

Most people are impaired to the degree where they are incapable of driving a motor vehicle with safety, to themselves or others, if they have a specified degree of concentration of alcohol in their blood.

It is quite true, as the hon. Prime Minister says, that some people may still be able to drive safely with that concentration. Some may not be able to drive safely with an even less concentration. But this is what applies to most people. I would suggest that we are never going to solve this problem of impaired and drunken driving unless we lay down some objective standard.

We have already done that sort of thing with the speed law. We say that on certain highways one may not drive his vehicle faster than 50 miles an hour. It is quite true that some people may be able to drive quite safely at 55 miles an hour, and other people may not drive too safely even at 45 miles an hour.

But if we had to go into court on a matter of a speed charge to prove that the person concerned, taking into account his individual peculiarities, is not capable of driving safely at the speed at which he was driving, then we would never get any convictions under the speed laws.

So the way we have solved the problem is to simply lay down a standard that applies—or appears to apply, in the opinion of those informed on the matter—to most people.

We simply say, in the law, that one may not drive a vehicle at a faster speed than that prescribed for the particular road. Then when we come into court, there is no problem of proving anything about the individual characteristics of the person concerned. It is a sheer matter of fact: did he go faster than 50 miles an hour or did he not?

Even here, Mr. Chairman, I would point out we use these mechanical devices which the hon. Prime Minister apparently is so suspicious of. How do we prove how fast he went? We prove it by a mechanical device. How else can we prove it?

Mr. Grossman: That is pretty specious.

Mr. Bryden: That is a very sound argument.

On this other matter, we will never get any effective control over impaired driving or drunk driving unless we lay down objective standards in much the same way. All the experts I have talked to—and they have been numerous—are quite unanimous in their opinion that the standard I mention is fair and reasonable.

It would be fair and reasonable to provide in the law, not that a person may not drive a vehicle when he is impaired because that is a very difficult thing to establish, but to provide simply that he may not lawfully drive a car with a greater concentration of alcohol in his blood than the prescribed amount. Then we have a simple and direct enforcement problem.

It is not a question of going into his individual variations, or what the policeman thought he looked like when he got out of his car, or when he walked into the police station. It is simply a question: Did he have a greater concentration of alcohol than that amount in his blood or not? This can be readily established—either proved or disproved.

I would submit that we will never get any real action on this problem of drinking and driving unless we can set objective standards. The charge will not be that the man is impaired, or that he was drunk or anything else. It will simply be that he drove a vehicle with a greater concentration than the permissible amount in his blood. That is a charge that can readily be proved or disproved.

I submit there is no question of British constitutional liberties or anything similar involved. It is simply a question as to whether or not the people, who wish the privilege or driving motor vehicles in this province, are prepared to accept conditions which are necessary and reasonable to protect the lives and limbs of other people. If they are not prepared to do that, then I submit that they should not have the privilege of driving.

I submit that the hon. Prime Minister is confusing the issue completely with the statements he has made.

Mr. MacDonald: Ten years of education to get this government up to date.

Mr. Chairman: At this time I would like to inform the House that, in spite of the fact that I believe the government has paid their hydro bill, I am informed by the office of the Speaker that the lights will go out at 5:30 for 4 or 5 minutes, I believe for some repair work.

We have asked the attendants to open the windows, but I propose to suspend the proceedings at that time for 4 or 5 minutes, and the members to consider themselves at ease.

Mr. Grossman: That will not bother the Opposition, they are always in the dark.

Mr. Chairman: The power goes off as well on the recorders. Do hon. members care to continue until the lights go out?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would hate to be accused of having put the lights out, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The recording machines are off. Will the Hansard reporter please continue.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, before I complete that debate, I will say I have no doubt in my mind about the sincerity of those hon. members who have expressed their views ardently in favour of this type of test, and the cutting off of licences if certain amounts of alcohol are found to be in the bodies of the persons tested, and if they are driving cars. I have no doubt that those hon. members are sincere in their views. This is a subject that is being debated in many places.

I would not wish to let the impression remain that I think the hon. member for Woodbine gave, namely that, unless some such system as that is put into effect, we are not really coming to grips with that particular type of driving. I say this because, actually, I firmly believe that right now a very large proportion of the charges that are laid in that field result in convictions.

With respect to the tests themselves, I am told by the head of the laboratory that, of those people who are asked to take the test, roughly 75 per cent. do willingly take it, so we are not dealing with a blank wall of refusals or anything of that sort.

The great bulk of the people today, when they are met with that sort of a situation, are prepared to have the test taken, and the evidence obtained in that way, as secondary really to other evidence, goes into the case.

I think there is a good deal to be said for what is being done at the present time, even though, in the view of certain hon. members who have spoken, it is not sufficient.

On that basis, I would like to leave the subject, mainly because I do feel that our statistics, and the reports that we are getting, would indicate that a lot is being done in that field, and that there are not so many people refusing by any means, as has been indicated in some of the speeches here tonight.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to state one brief word, if I may, to the hon. Attorney-General's last remark. The use of the breathalyzer, as it is presently being employed, is merely corroborative of the offences of drunken driving, and driving while ability is impaired. It is of corroborative value, and not too much more than that, at this time.

The point where the great field of trouble occurs is with those drivers who have imbibed less than what is regarded as having their ability impaired, or less than what will classify them as drunken drivers, and this is the field where the law is unfortunately able to do nothing, unless the court is satisfied that an individual has his ability impaired.

Did he get up to a certain scale on the breathalyzer test, or the further scale that the driver is drunk? If not, there is no offence being committed.

There is still a great untouched field that our law does not get at at all, where people whose ability is affected but are not drunk enough to have their ability impaired, are not committing any offence.

Mr. Chairman, you may remember that I went into the statistics of this substantially in my Throne speech. At that time, I quoted a very great number of statistics. I do not have them readily available at the moment.

But the real field of danger lies with the driver who suddenly gets a false sense of courage, and whose ability is affected, and the percentage—we can see it rise—of accident potential increases far out of proportion to the increase on the breathalyzer meter.

There is where the danger field is. There is the field, Mr. Chairman, where I think we are doing very little about minimizing these accidents on the road.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I wish to add a word about another aspect of the same problem. I speak as one who has had quite a few small occasions to defend people charged with drinking while driving.

Now, I would only hope that the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister, that he made a few moments ago, could be sent to every magistrate in the province. I say this because, like him I am, if anything, a little biased on behalf of accused persons; though unlike him I could not pretend, sir, to be a competent defender of accused persons—to which heights he no doubt attained. I suspect that, when he did practice law in the county of Victoria, he was the veritable Gerry Giesler of Victoria county.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another aspect of this problem that I wish to draw to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General. I recall reading, about a year or so ago, quite a few incidents in the press where certain Crown attorneys, at various points in the province, had instructed police officers not to lay a charge of impaired driving at all.

I hasten to say that this did not obtain at any place I know of in northern Ontario. Certainly it did not obtain in the district of Sudbury, where we have a very competent, able, gentlemanly person—the dean of all Crown attorneys in the province—E. D. Wilkins, who would not for a moment, participate in the activity to which I am going to refer.

However, as I say, we read in the press where certain Crown attorneys had instructed police officers not to lay any charges of impaired driving. They said: "Lay the charge of drunk driving and let the magistrate decide whether he will reduce it to impaired driving."

Now, most hon. members will know that under section 222 of the criminal code, the penalty for driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated is, for a first offence, imprisonment for not more than 3 months and not less than 30 days.

In any event, under that section, a conviction means that the offender must go to jail, and there is no option of suspended sentence or fine or anything else. He must be incarcerated in jail for a conviction of driving while intoxicated.

Whereas under the other section—the lesser offence, driving while impaired—the magistrate has the option to fine him, for a first offence, not more than $500 and not less than $50, or to imprisonment for 3 months or to both.

In any event, magistrates have the habit, for a first offence, of levying a fine, and I think that practice to be universal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my complaint is this, that any Crown attorney in this province, who instructs police officers to not consider on the evidence as they see it, when they apprehend the motorist, and form the conclusion whether he is impaired or whether he is drunk, I go as far as to say, sir, that such a Crown attorney is almost counselling malicious prosecution.

If the police officer does not make up his mind, judge in the circumstances, and does not lay the proper charge, and it later gets into court without any thought or investigation or determination on the part of the police officer, then he may be guilty of malicious prosecution. Regarding the Crown attorney who encourages that type of behaviour, and instructs the police officers to do that, I would also go as far as to say, sir, that he is conspiring to engage in a malicious prosecution.

Well, I did a little research, and I speak strictly from memory, but my memory on this score is accurate, that some Crown attorneys in the province have engaged in that activity.

I would say to the hon. Attorney-General that such a practice on their part ought to be stamped out ruthlessly. They should be instructed to inform the police officers that, when an officer apprehends a motorist, and suspects him of driving while drinking and the officer pursues his investigation, he must come to a determination as to whether that person is impaired, or whether his inebriation goes to the extent of being intoxicated.

If there is not any determination of that issue, then that driver is put in dire jeopardy of going to jail. If he comes into court and the magistrate is dealing only with the more serious offence, such an accused driver—because of bad defence work, or because of improper presentation of the defence, or the evidence on behalf of the Crown—stands in danger of not only suffering the indignity of incarceration in one of our institutions, but in dire danger of losing his livelihood.

Therefore, I would ask the hon. Attorney-General to give the necessary instructions to the Crown attorneys in that regard.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Seriously, Mr. Chairman, this is not action under the crime laboratory. But the matter has been brought up, and my hon. friend has made a statement as he sees it—

Mr. Sopha: Well, we were dealing with—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: —and I am not going to get into any combat about it. But the fact of the matter is that, in all these things, the facts govern, and from the facts the proper charges should be laid.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: However, we are dealing with some 74 Crown attorneys, actually. There are 74 different personalities, with 74 variations, no doubt, in their thinking.

But I will say that the Crown attorneys meet quite regularly, and they discuss these problems at their meetings. I would hope that the general approach to the subject is far more satisfactory than the one case apparently, to which my hon. friend refers. Perhaps that has been cured by this time. I hope so, anyway.

Vote 210 agreed to.

On vote 211:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, on vote 211, probation services. We have Mr. Coughlan in charge of this as director, Mr. MacFarlane as assistant, Mr. Sompter as his chief training officer, here at the headquarters.

During the past year, the work of the probation staff continued to increase. A total of 12,599 offenders were under supervision during the year.

Of this number, 8,545 were adult offenders, and 4,054 were juvenile offenders.

The probation staff also prepared 9,700 pre-sentence reports for the use of the courts. This represents an increase of over 1,500 reports from the previous year.

This type of pre-sentence report that they prepare is really very extensive. I was very much interested, in taking one at random here, to see how thorough it was.

In this particular one, a man faced a charge of stealing, I think it was. He was 30 years of age, they investigated his family record—father, mother, sisters. They discussed the matter with the priest of the church he attended, with the governor of the county jail, with the member of the board of education of the school he had attended, and also the teachers in the collegiate, the vocational guidance party, bowling league, the Young Men's Christian Association director, and members of the police.

There was a very, very thorough investigation in making up an extensive pre-sentence report of something like 16 or 17 pages of information and case history. Now, that is the sort of thing that is going on to the extent, numbered in the thousands, in this field of probation.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I think these pre-sentence reports are not only a humane approach, in connection with people who come before the courts, but are a very logical economic approach to take, when we think of what will happen to a young offender if he goes on the wrong track and ends up eventually in the penitentiary.

I appreciate that the hon. Attorney-General realizes the necessity of having an intelligent analysis of a young offender. But what I do not understand is why there is not some kind of procedure—some enactment—to ensure that there will be a pre-sentence report made on every young offender who comes up before a court, and who faces the probability that he may be sent to an institution.

I would like to say that I think that there should be far more emphasis placed on the preventive service rather than on that of waiting and putting people only into institutions. I made a point of that in my Throne speech, in comparing what other countries are doing, and I would like to feel that the hon. Attorney-General is going to increase his probation staff considerably, and place greater emphasis on preventive service, and that he is also going to work at other approaches to give further assistance in the work of probation.

I am thinking of probation hostels—I would like to find out how many probation hostels we have in the province?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Coughlan, who is here at the moment, assures me that practically all first offenders are covered by the reporting system.

Mr. Thompson: Why does the hon. Attorney-General not make it mandatory that all first offenders be covered?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The Fauteaux report, of course, covers this rather fully, and for people sentenced to longer periods—I think it is two years or over—that is, I think, to be implemented by the federal authority in the way the hon. member for Dovercourt has indicated. At least, that is where it would have to be implemented in order to give it legal effect.

Mr. Thompson: Well, Mr. Chairman, are there not provincial statutes for which an offender could be sent to jail? Why could it not be implemented in connection with that?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I would say to the hon. member that the director of probation services tells me that all first offenders are now covered by that type of pre-sentencing report, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. Thompson: I was just interested in the figures of the hon. Attorney-General. There were 12,000 adult offenders who were covered by the probation department, yet he stated that only 9,700 of these had a pre-sentence report.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is at all possible to complete this department at this moment, so I would like to move that the committee rise and report certain resolutions.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions, begs leave to sit again, and moves the adoption of the report.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with a few of these private bills on the order paper.

BOARD OF EDUCATION, TOWNSHIP OF ETOBICOKE

Mr. A. H. Cowling moves second reading of Bill No. Pr17, "An Act respecting the board of education for the township of Etobicoke."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF KINGSTON

Mr. J. R. Simonett moves second reading of Bill No. Pr24, "An Act respecting the city of Kingston."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BLIND RIVER-ELLIOT LAKE HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT BOARD

Mr. Cowling moves second reading of Bill No. Pr28, "An Act respecting the Blind River-Elliott Lake high school district board."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of the whole, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

CITY OF FORT WILLIAM

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. W. A. Stewart, from the standing committee on health and welfare, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

An Act to amend The Nursing Act, 1951.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

An Act to facilitate cornea transplants from the bodies of deceased persons to living persons.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill contains a series of amendments to various sections of The Highway Traffic Act as they now exist, together with the introduction of several new sections and new principles. I would like to review them very briefly for the House.

The terms of "dusk" and "dawn" which appear in the lighting sections of the Act are now replaced by "one-half hour after sunset" and "one-half hour before sunrise," they being more specific in nature.

There will be a provision that all motor vehicles manufactured after January 1, 1962 must have a red reflector or red reflective material on the rear thereof.

At present only commercial motor vehicles are required to carry a reflector. In the future, all new cars will have to comply with this.

There is a section which will prohibit the sale of new motor vehicles over 80 inches in width after January 1, 1961 that do not have the clearance lights required under The Highway Traffic Act. Authority is being sought to regulate the standards and specifications of hydraulic brake fluid. There is an amendment to the Act which will authorize other means of preventing wheel spray and splash in addition to mudguards and fenders as now required.

There is presently a requirement that, where a trailer or object is being towed by another vehicle, there must be two forms of attachment. This is being extended to where a motor vehicle not under the control of a driver is being towed by another motor vehicle.

Authority is being asked to prescribe, by regulation, the form of certificate now required in respect of mechanical fitness under The Highway Traffic Act. The Highway Traffic Act requires a certificate; authority is being set forth to set the content and form of that certificate.

Authority is being sought that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council may pass regulations respecting the use and sale of accessories and ornaments on motor vehicles. There is an amendment which will give the department the authority for requiring people who have chauffeurs' licences and operators' licences to appear for re-examination.

At present, the department licences garages, parking lots and used car lots. This is being extended to the wrecking and dismantling of vehicles. Provision is being made that not only may the original permit for a commercial vehicle be carried by the driver or the vehicle, the amendment will now permit a copy to be carried.

There will be a requirement as to the identification of ownership of road-building machines when on a highway. Provisions are being re-enacted to make it clear that improper left turns are offences under the Act. Provision is being made for the use of the green arrow in signal lights traffic control system.

At present there is a prohibition against attaching a toboggan, bicycle, roller skates or other means of conveyance of that kind to a motor vehicle. This will now make it an offence if the driver of a vehicle permits that kind of thing. The offence of crowding a driver's seat with passengers or goods, which was formerly a subsection of the careless driving section, is being re-enacted as a separate offence with a separate penalty. It will now be separate from the careless driving section.

There will be a prohibition in the Act against crossing a railway intersection at a time when signal lights, or mechanical signal device, or a flagman is giving warning. There will be a requirement of stopping the vehicle and not permitting it to proceed until it is safe to do so. There will be a prohibition against driving around or under a crossing gate or barrier at a railway crossing.

It will be required that the driver of a school bus must actuate the signalling device when stopped for taking on or discharging passengers on a highway. The Act presently sets forth the stopping of motor vehicles in respect of school buses but there has not been any obligation on the driver to actually actuate the signal. Presently there is a requirement as to stopping while overtaking school buses. An extension of that is being made that the driver of a vehicle, meeting or approaching a school bus, must slow down to a reasonable speed and drive with caution until he passes the bus.

Quite broad authority is being sought to make regulations in respect to the operation of vehicles used for the transporting of school children—that is, beyond public vehicles; this will now cover all vehicles.

There will be a requirement in The Highway Traffic Act to require motor vehicles, having a seating capacity of 10 or more persons, when transporting children to stop at all railway crossings. It is also an obligation on commercial vehicles transporting dangerous or flammable materials to stop at all railroad crossings. All such vehicles will carry the sign, "This vehicle stops at all railway crossings."

There will be a section permitting municipalities to erect stop signs at other than through highways as presently authorized. There will be a requirement setting forth time limits within which a police officer must file a report of an accident.

THE MUNICIPAL UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS ACT, 1953

Hon. W. K. Warrender moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill extends the provisions respecting grants to municipalities in 1959 in relation to indigent hospitalization for the year 1960.

THE FACTORY, SHOP AND OFFICE BUILDING ACT

Hon. C. Daley moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment is one that I think is important. It has to do with the bake shops. The Act as it exists today requires that all bake shops be above ground; this was enacted many, many years ago, when it was prohibited that bake shops be in basements. But, in the modern buildings of today—these large apartment buildings with stores on the ground floor—what we are asking is that, in cases where the plans are submitted—which they must be, of course, and approved by The Department of Labour—that, under certain circumstances, bake shops could be permitted below ground.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the ninth annual report of the alcoholism research foundation for the year ended December 31, 1959. I may say to the hon. members that a copy of this report will be placed on their desks shortly.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to bring to the attention of yourself and this House, and the other citizens and motorists in the province of Ontario, that there are only 7 shopping days left until March 16, which is the last day for getting the renewal of licences and operators' permits and plates. If hon. members do not have theirs, they should attend to it. I know, Mr.

Speaker, that you set for all an example because I understand that you renewed your licence on the first day on which it could be done in January.

I bring to the attention of this House, and to the other citizens, that if they do not renew their licences by March 16, they will be compelled to walk on the morning of March 17, which is St. Patrick's day, which is really the best day to drive under those conditions. I say now, as I have said on every occasion since the first day in January when these were put on sale, there will be no extension of time.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills received third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. Pr26, An Act respecting the city of Fort William.

Bill No. Pr36, An Act to incorporate Huntington University.

Bill No. Pr38, An Act respecting the city of Barrie.

Bill No. Pr40, An Act respecting the township of Toronto.

Bill No. Pr44, An Act respecting the University of Sudbury.

Bill No. Pr45, An Act to incorporate the University of Lalemant College.

Bill No. Pr46, An Act to incorporate Laurentien University of Sudbury.

Bill No. 66, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Power Commission Act.

Hon. L. M. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL

On vote 211:

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last evening, we were in the midst of dealing with a question. The question was about this, I believe—at least it implied this, at any rate: Why are pre-sentence reports not compulsory for everyone who offends against a provincial statute? I think that in substance is what the question was.

I would say that the primary purpose of a pre-sentence report is to enable the bench to decide whether the offender should be placed on probation or sent to prison. In actual practice, in the vast majority of cases, an offence against the provincial statute does not place the offender's liberty in jeopardy. A fine is levied and the offender is quite prepared to pay the fine, so that imprisonment or probation are not involved.

Actually, in a recent amendment in 1953 to The Summary Convictions Act, it was made possible that, notwithstanding a mandatory jail sentence in any particular provincial Act, it was still possible for the magistrate to make or give a fine, and deal with the matter in that way. Actually, pre-sentence reports would have to be prepared for offences against The Highway Traffic Act, The Liquor Control Act and many other provincial statutes, if we were literally to endeavour to cover all the first offenders for provincial offences.

As a matter of fact, when I come to a later vote, I will give some figures in relation to the volume of charges which would indicate how impractical that would be. The effort, of course, is to cover those cases where jail sentences are involved, and where the situations would indicate that this type of report would be very beneficial to the presiding magistrate.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): In connection with the answer from the hon. Attorney-General, I am interested why, in those cases, under provincial statutes, where a young offender could be sent to jail for up to 6 months, there is no mandatory pre-sentence report. I speak from some small personal experience in this, since I was a probation officer myself for two years. I know the effect of someone being sent to an institution for 6 months and even shorter, where he came back again with a real education in crime. It is a very costly effort for society.

I do not think an institution is the place for an offender in many cases, or that it does a rehabilitation job. I feel there should be a constant stress on keeping people in the community if at all possible.

I suggest that there are young men and women who commit offences under the provincial statutes, and are sent to jail without a pre-sentence report.

I appreciate that the hon. Attorney-General emphasized that a pre-sentence report is both a humane and intelligent approach to understanding someone who has committed an offence. I appreciate that he agrees with the Fauteux recommendation. I think this is an opportunity for this province to stand out in one area, by pioneering in this field before this change takes place between federal and provincial responsibility in connection with incarceration.

The hon. Attorney-General should establish in his own provincial statutes the principle that he advocates and he should say that young offenders coming up in court, who are liable to go to jail for 6 months, should in every case be given a pre-sentence report.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would say to the hon. member—and I would like to make it clear—not that we would not have been glad to have him, but actually he was not a probation officer in the province of Ontario. He may be drawing on his experience from a province that is not quite as advanced as this province is in this field. But I would say that we do endeavour to cover the very ground that he has mentioned, and certainly in the future we will do more and more in that direction.

Mr. Thompson: May I just say this, Mr. Chairman, that I would be interested to know how many young offenders go to jail for breaking provincial statutes without having any pre-sentence reports.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The answer would be practically none. I will be dealing later on with statistics.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General can tell the House the reason why he retains probation services in his department? One of the 4 principles that the Gordon report lays down is the grouping together of related functions. Now, we have a very substantial department of government, The Department of Reform Institutions, and it would seem to me that probation services, and the thinking that goes into the whole Department of Reform Institutions, and the very substantial ability of the hon. Minister of that department (Mr. Wardrope) could properly be directed toward looking after the whole field. If the government keeps probation services apart from the whole administration of reform institutions and training schools, it splits these things up into different jurisdictions, and the province does not get the best service that it should get.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, under the present set-up, probation officers are officers of the court, and I would think properly within The Department of the Attorney-General. I do not think the suggestion that they go to

The Department of Reform Institutions would be advisable.

The Department of Reform Institutions deals with the people when they have been taken off to jail and dealt with afterwards. Of course also the Fauteux report, and the implementation of that report, will go a long way towards indicating in the future what the various functions in the province will be in that department, especially where there is going to be a very definite division of sentences as indicated in the Fauteux report, and of responsibility at that point.

Mr. Singer: Why is there not a very substantial similarity of function between the people who run the training schools, for instance, and the people who run the probation service? Are they not working towards the same end, with the same sort of people? Would it not be logical if they were all co-ordinated and working together from the same direction?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I have no further comment, I made myself clear a moment ago.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, there are a number of questions I would like to ask with regard to this vote. First of all, I know that the sum to be appropriated is increased by about $130,000 over last year's appropriation, and most of that amount appears to be in item No. 1—salaries.

I would like first of all to ask the hon. Minister how much of the increase in the item for salaries represents merely the increase in salaries that have taken place for a variety of reasons, and how much represents an anticipated increase in the number of probation officers?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Chairman, in connection with that, I would say that the bulk of the dollar increase is for increases in salaries. It is not contemplated there will be any large number of additional staff this year, although there will be some. But I would say that this staff has grown to quite considerable proportions, and this might be a good time to give the figures on that.

In addition to the 3 probation officers in the director's office—and I mentioned them yesterday by name—there are some 13 supervisory officers, and on the provincial level 125 other officers and a secretarial staff of 78, making a total staff of 219. They are distributed thus: Toronto and York, 26; Ottawa, 6; Hamilton, 10; Windsor, 5; Chatham, 4; Welland, 3; other locations, 71.

In addition to that, in the purely juvenile field of work, there are some 37 additional probation officers in 6 different parts of the province, and they have, I think, 15 secretaries. Therefore the total strength across the province at the present time is 178 probation officers and 93 secretaries for a total of 271.

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Attorney-General now talking about the people who are paid entirely on his staff?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, no. The ones entirely on the staff of the probation branch, and appearing in the figures here, total 219. But the whole total in the province in this field of work is 271. A survey was made last year in regard to the work of the probation officers and the type of work that they should be devoting the major part of their time to. That was laid down as a guide for them. That particular work and the changing of schedules, to some extent to fit into that work, is still in the process of being tested, and is under survey at the present time.

With this explanation I would say that we feel that the advances that we are making, at the present time, are adequate, and that we have the situation well in hand.

Mr. Bryden: Could the hon. Attorney-General indicate the average case load on the probation officer, that he just has been referring to?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, for what it is worth, I never pay much attention to case load in the sense of what an average case load is, any more than I pay much attention to the statistics in the courts of the number of charges. For example, there might be 1,000 charges, 900 of which might have taken up a few minutes each of time, and the other 100 take up the rest of the year. The figure is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 60. But, as this survey at present is progressing, and with the redistribution of work, I feel that the probation officers are doing a fine job, and that they are quite capable of doing the work they have.

Mr. Bryden: There is just one further question, Mr. Chairman. I believe from the figures the hon. Attorney-General gave yesterday, I did not get them quite exactly but it was something between 8,000 and 9,000 adults who are currently on probation. Did I understand him correctly on that? Also, there are about 4,000 juveniles.

I am wondering how many people convicted of offences are currently serving terms in jail in this province, as distinct from ones who are on probation.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Categories?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am trying to find out, of the people convicted of offences, how many are on probation and how many are actually in jail or in reform institutions of any kind.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Some figures are at my fingertips, but I cannot give him that. We can get them.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I have clarification of another question I asked last night with respect to probation hostels? I feel very strongly that a probation officer, without community services to help him, is not particularly effective.

It seems to me that, in many cases, the choice the magistrate has is either to tell an offender that he can go on probation, and then the offender goes back to a broken home, to the surroundings that already had caused some of the influence to get him into trouble, or else he has to go to an institution. Consequently there is more pressure on the institution.

I would like to ask how many probation hostels there are in the province and also—in connection with the north—how many psychiatric clinics they have to examine some young offender who obviously has serious emotional problems.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Just very recently, Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the first house of probation—if we want to call it that—or hostel of probation, was opened in York county. It just happens that the Salvation Army House of Concord report reached my desk just a few days ago, and it is for their first period of operation, and it might be of interest to take some excerpts from it.

The House of Concord is a probation hostel, and represents the first Canadian experiment in this field. It is a means whereby young offenders under 21 years of age can be placed under probation rather than committed to prison.

The young men who live here during their probation period come from homes that would not indicate a successful period of probation. They are difficult cases and, in view of this, the results obtained in the first year are not discouraging.

Now, that is the opinion given me by the director.

Out of the 88 cases to date—and this illustrates the hard problems that they are dealing with—18 left the home without permission. No effort is made to detain them here against their will. Eleven persons were requested to leave as—what is the term the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions likes to use, not incorrigible, what is the term? Unmanageable. The memo says incorrigible, and I knocked that word out for unmanageable.

Three applications were rejected. Six were admitted to mental hospitals. Five were arrested on other charges. Ten were honourably discharged and 36 still remain in residence.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether or not I am asking this at the right time. But, in connection with the juvenile courts, when a young offender appears in front of the juvenile court, and is requested to have psychiatric treatments, I would like to know whether that would come under The Attorney-General's Department, whether they do have psychiatrists, and how many they have, and where they are located.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There is, of course, here in Metro Toronto a very fine organizational set-up of juvenile family courts, and there is a department of psychiatry there. A few months ago The Department of Health made available one of their outstanding psychiatrists to head that department. I hope the services of that particular department will be available beyond the confines of the Metro area, on some working arrangement with any municipalities close enough to take advantage of it.

In addition to that, there is what might be called a travelling medical unit, where psychiatry is available—and I presume by appointment—out of the Ontario Hospital.

Mr. Belanger: Thank you. That is what I want to know. But I do know that in the past, from experience I have had, that we have waited a period of 6 to 8 weeks, even longer than that, to have some of these children examined by a psychiatrist. I am wondering whether the number could be increased to relieve that condition.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I should add that there are also clinics at Port Arthur, Sudbury, and North Bay where facilities are available. As I indicated a few moments ago, in very serious cases, there can be a direct contact through the Ontario Hospital where a psychiatrist might be sent directly to the spot concerned.

But the hon. member made a point there, perhaps, that we should try to do something a little more closely associated with the southwest part of the province, and I would certainly be glad to look into it.

Mr. Belanger: I thank the hon. Attorney-General very much.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General could tell us who pays the salaries of the staffs of the juvenile and family courts.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member leave that to vote 215, section 6—

Mr. Singer: Well, he mentioned here the availability of a psychiatrist to other municipalities, and I want to—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I can answer the question. Was the question in relation to general salaries, or were they specific?

Mr. Singer: Well, as I understood the hon. Attorney-General's remarks, Mr. Chairman, he said that he hoped that the facilities of the juvenile and family court in Toronto would be made available to outlying municipalities, and I am wondering who pays the salaries. It is my understanding that Metro pays substantially all of the salaries.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Also, I would like to know whether or not the province is suggesting that Metro assume an additional burden to service other municipalities than its own.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh no, although I think the generosity of Metro could at times be extended. But what I do think is that an arrangement could be worked out with any municipalities outside the confines of Metro that would, of course, take into account the services given.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like, if I may, to refer back to some of the comments the hon. Attorney-General made when he was answering my question with regard to the number of probation officers at present at work in the province.

As the hon. Attorney-General said there has been quite a substantial—and, in my opinion, quite commendable—increase in probation services over the past few years. I would judge, however, both from the estimates before us and from what the hon. Attorney-General said, that it is not contemplated that there will be an appreciable increase in the coming year.

I am quite aware that we are in the area of judgment and different people can come to different judgments on the same set of facts. Certainly when the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is having such obvious trouble as he is now having in balancing his budget, the government has to be pretty careful about expenditures.

But I am strongly convinced that this is the wrong area in which to economize or to hold the line. I believe there should be a continued expansion of probation services, as staff becomes available and as it can be trained.

I would like to call attention to a report that appeared, I believe, in the Toronto Globe and Mail—the girl who clipped it out for me forgot to put the name of the paper on it but it is a Canadian Press dispatch dated February 21:

Canadians were urged yesterday to face their crime problem and make a greater effort to reduce it. George Street, chairman of the national parole board, said 20,000 persons are now in Canadian prisons. The federal penitentiary population alone has increased to 6,060 last year from 5,165 in 1956. An alarming one-third of the prison population was under 24 years of age.

Now this is a quote direct from Mr. Street:

"Do we go on building more and more prisons for more and more criminals or do we try to do something more constructive?" Mr. Street asked.

And so on.

There is a good deal more to it, but I would like to call that comment, which is along the lines of many others made by similar authorities in the field, to the attention of the government.

As I tried to indicate in speaking on the budget, and I will repeat it here without going into the detail, I think it is a false economy to hold the line, to retrench, if I may use that expression, on a matter such as probation services. The net effect in the long run will very likely be, as Mr. Street appears to be worried about, is that we will be building more and more prisons. That is not a way of saving money, that is a way of spending far more money.

Again I am mentioning this from the straight point of view of economics. But I do not want it to be thought that I am not even more interested in the humanitarian aspect involved.

But even from an economic point of view, I submit that it is good business to consider a steady expansion of probation services, such as has taken place in the past years, but which is to be curtailed in the coming fiscal year.

I hope that the government will reconsider its policy along that line, and envisage a further expansion of probation services, and of the number of probation officers that are available. I quite realize that we cannot proceed too fast in this; we can proceed only as fast as we can get qualified staff. But apparently the government is not, for this current year, contemplating any real programme to get an increase in qualified staff.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I would not for a minute want to leave the impression that we are standing still. Last year some 15 officers were added. This year there will be two or three on the provincial level. Last year a considerable amount of study was given to the situation in Metropolitan Toronto, and this year some 6 additional probation officers will be added in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General for an answer? Is the limitation of an increase to two or three in the coming year due to the shortage of money or the shortage of available personnel?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would not say it was for either. As a matter of fact, I think it is related to the planning and the study and the survey that is proceeding. As I just said, sometimes we go where there is the greatest need. In Metropolitan Toronto, this year, there has been a lot of study given to the situation, and there is a very definite move forward, both in regard to staff and in regard to funds. Perhaps I should not speak for Metropolitan Toronto, but I am quite confident that the budget which Metropolitan Toronto will vote this year in this field will be in the neighbourhood of $500,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Attorney-General stating that, as far as the provincial government is concerned—let us not confuse the issue with what the Metro—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is very much with the—

Mr. MacDonald: As far as the provincial government is concerned, is it possible for the hon. Attorney-General to get only two or three more probation officers during the year, apart from the money angle of it? Are there no more available?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We only have 200 or 300 names on a list to choose from. I do not know how many of them would be suitable, but we are not having any difficulty at all in getting names of people who would like to be picked for the job.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just as a footnote to what the hon. member for Woodbine has stated, that, if there are more people available and more people who could be trained, it is penny-wise and pound-foolish not to take them on staff, when every man taken on is going to save the department, and save the government, and save the people, thousands of dollars?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We cannot fly off in every direction at once. Steps are being taken in the Metro area this year—

Mr. MacDonald: I am not flying off in every direction at once. The hon. Attorney-General has had the brake on this development for years, notwithstanding the progress we have made.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General can inform us if the same situation still pertains in Metropolitan Toronto, as it did a few years ago, where the province appoints the probation officers, fixes their salary, and Metro pays them without having any control?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Metro pays without what?

Mr. Singer: Without having any control. They merely pay the people that the province, or that the department, has appointed.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No. As a matter of fact, there is no change in the actual dollar situation. But there is a very definite change in relation to work that is going on there. I have the benefit now of Mr. Harry Doughty, Mr. Bury from The Department of Public Welfare, and Mrs. Charles Duffy as a committee to advise on these procedures. This voluntary committee has gone to work like a group of beavers, and have done a wonderful job of study, and have intimate knowledge of the workings of the courts. They have made recommendations which, at the present time, are in the process of being put into effect. I have great pride in telling this House of these forward steps, in answer to this question.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am not sure that I got the information I was looking for. Does the province still make the appointments and fix the salaries, and does Metro pay the bill?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is right. If my learned hon. friend will look up the statute governing this, he will see that this is the law. Unless the law is changed, naturally we abide by the law.

Mr. Thompson: How many foster homes are there for probationers? In other words, how many on probation, coming up, are put in foster homes?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The answer is none, if they are not dealt with in that way.

Mr. Thompson: Could I just ask one last question? Is the hon. Attorney-General satisfied with the situation regarding community services which can back up a probation officer? By that I am thinking of hostels and the other types of services. Is he satisfied or does he intend to expand these services?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I would say that this department—and I think I can speak for the whole government—is never satisfied with anything. We are always looking for improvement, and if there are any good suggestions we will certainly take a look at them.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask specifically where the hon. Attorney-General is going to make improvement in connection with these community services, since he is so unsatisfied?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, if the hon. member has any good suggestions, he should let us have them, and we will—

Mr. Thompson: Does the hon. Attorney-General have no suggestions?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, we are working every day on the problem.

Vote 211 agreed to.

On vote 212:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, this vote is related to the fire marshal. In 1959, the first full academic year of operation of the new Ontario fire college at Gravenhurst was completed. Mr. Scott is the fire marshal, and I am glad to see that he is here. A total of 305 students attended from 124 Ontario municipal fire departments.

I think the House will be interested in knowing that the total capital cost of the fire college, including the purchase of the land and construction of buildings and equipping, was $804,000. The operating cost is approximately $75,000 a year.

In the field training programme conducted by the fire marshal's office, 2,161 fire students received training by itinerant instructors travelling about the province, and 107 fire fighters attended 3 regional schools.

Criminal investigations connected with fires also reached their highest total in 1959, with 94 convictions for arson and allied crimes, 24 acquittals, and 25 criminal cases pending at the end of the year.

In addition to supervising some 350,000 buildings—fire inspection by local fire departments—the fire prevention engineering division of the fire marshal's office has been showing great progress, particularly in its long-term building up of a fire safety programme through examining plans of new buildings before they are constructed.

In a two-year-old undertaking of examining plans for all new school buildings and additions, the fire marshal's office examined and approved 1,008 school plans in 1959, which in itself shows what a rapid growth we have in this field. This service at the present time is being extended to hospital plans in co-operation with the Ontario hospital services commission.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Chairman, on that one point of fires, I just want to make a statement and then ask a question afterwards. I have here from the Windsor Star a series of articles—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member suggested that he was going to get hot later on. Is this the point?

Mr. Reaume: Yes, this is the point.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is this a friendly question?

Mr. Reaume: It is pointed out, in a series of articles over a week's time, that a large number of rural schools, apparently very old schools, are indeed fire traps.

Now, I know that the local boards are practically out of funds, and I know that they have to have help from somewhere. But it appears that in almost every one of these old schools, there are some 40 children involved. And I understand, too, that there is really no inspection of these schools by the department of the fire marshal.

It is true that he inspects schools in a town, or in a city, he also approves of a plan of a school being built.

But there are some schools in the province, and indeed some in my own area, which I do not think he has inspected. And I was reading in an article here that, in a small place outside of Buffalo, some 15 boys and girls were burned by reason of being in a fire trap.

I think that really there ought to be some system of inspecting, based on the province inspecting all these rural schools and that if, in the opinion of the fire marshal of the province these schools are fire traps, then indeed he should do something about it.

I do not think it would be wise to go on, as we are now, waiting until a rural school burns down, because indeed if any of our little boys and girls are burned to death, their blood will be upon the hands of every hon. member in this House.

So I think that what we ought to do at once is to order the fire marshal to make a complete inspection of, and to report back on, every rural school. I think, indeed every school in the province should be inspected, and if the fire marshal finds that one is a fire trap, he should do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, that was, of course, made legal by legislation, and it would involve a very substantial staff of engineers to do the job. There are about 6,000 schools in the province. They are under the autonomy of local school boards, and there are very efficient local fire departments in many parts of the province.

Now, fundamentally, the duty is at the local level. But I am advised that, at any time if there is a special request, the fire marshal is always prepared to send somebody out to do a special job. The request would naturally have to come from the school board or local authority.

Mr. Reaume: Well, you see, that is where I think that the whole plan is wrong. I do not really think that we can, here and now, measure the value of a human life by the yardstick of dollars and cents.

If we do not have the proper staff, well, we should go out and employ them. The hon. Attorney-General should not wait for some reeve to ask the fire marshal to come down and inspect that district school. Indeed, this province is making grants to every school, so we have an interest in those schools, and we ought also to have an interest in every pupil in it. So if the hon. Attorney-General is going to sit down on his chair over there, and just wait until somebody back home in remote parts of the province asks him to come out and inspect that school, well they are just not going to do it.

I would say that I think the job ought to start from here, and that an order should go out from the hon. Attorney-General instructing the fire marshal of the province to go out into all parts of the province and inspect every school in it.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Mr. Chairman, in effect at least, I am just going to make a statement, and perhaps be corrected on this. Is it not a fact that, in the various municipalities, the fire chief is, in effect, a deputy fire marshal and has close connection, or close contact, with the fire marshal's office?

Now, I have a reason for asking this. But first I am going, at this particular time, to pay a compliment to the fire marshal's office and to the inspector, at least that we have in our area, Mr. Ray Simmons, who to me is an outstanding gentleman who, in many cases, has been of great help to the people and to the municipalities in the Ottawa area.

But I was of the opinion, first of all, that the school boards themselves have a certain responsibility to call upon the local fire officer to have these inspections. The municipal councils have that responsibility. In effect, they have to have their fire inspectors, or their fire chief and their inspectors, inspect all the schools, and they in turn have to report into the fire marshal's office.

If the fire chief feels that there is, maybe the borderline case, then he calls upon the office of the fire marshal, and I have, to this day yet to be shown where those services were refused.

Mr. Reaume: Well, I just want to point out, if you will, that there are many, many places in the province—indeed, many, many places—that do not have a fire department, or a fire chief. All they have is a reeve. Now, those are the places that I am speaking about. I do not mean in Ottawa especially.

Mr. Lavergne: Now, I have no argument with my hon. friend across there. But may I just say this, that both he and I stand as elected officers in municipal councils and on down. I feel this, that when the people were electing him to his position in that great high office—I mean it was a wonderful one—then he had heard exactly what he is saying at the present time, that his responsibility concerned the welfare of the people under his jurisdiction.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this same responsibility is instilled in the hearts and the minds and souls of every elected representative. The people under their jurisdiction do need assistance insofar as fire inspection is concerned. And I say to the hon. member that if these people just turn to this office, they will get all the assistance there. I want to compliment this office and that gentleman who is down in our area; I say he is doing a wonderful job.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I thank the hon. member for Russell, who has not forgotten when he was mayor of an area, and the autonomy of the area—

Mr. Reaume: Well, my dear hon. friend, I have not either.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: —which the hon. member for Essex North seems to have entirely forgotten in his desire to be critical. But may I say this—

Mr. Reaume: Oh now, do not be silly about this.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Just a minute. There has not been a death by fire—

Mr. Reaume: Now do not be foolish. I do not want an argument.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There has not been a death by fire—

Mr. Reaume: Do not be silly.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: —in any public or high school, or I think separate school, in Ontario in the past 40 years. If this is a problem for this House, I think perhaps the hon. member might show some reasons why. We are alive to the situation, but let us talk about something that is practical.

Mr. Reaume: You're not alive at all, you're dead.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this, that if the local school boards or the local authorities feel that there is a situation which they want the fire marshal to examine, and they want to make alterations to correct, all they have to do is get the fire marshal on the telephone, and he will send somebody there. If and when alterations are ordered by him, the school is entitled to, and eligible for, school grants.

Mr. Reaume: Now, I just want to add this, how foolish can you get—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, not as foolish as the hon. member.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Attorney-General is waiting until he has an invitation, yet he has a group of officers in the province who will go into any town or city and, if they find a person taking a drink behind the tree, they will make a special trip there and pinch him and put him in jail.

Now, what I am saying is this, I am talking about the rural sections of the province. It might be that the reeve of that section might not want to expend any funds on alterations, but that does not stop a fire from happening in that school. We have men going around, of course, and they will inspect public buildings, and boilers, and if they are not properly repaired in a public building, The Department of Labour will issue an order that the person fix the boiler. Yet the hon. Attorney-General's men will sit idly on their chairs and will not do anything about a problem where thousands of lives of little boys and girls are involved. And the hon. Attorney-General is going to sit there with a broad beam on his face and say that it is all right. I think he is foolish.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, when the people who speak for rural Ontario talk like the hon. member does, we might pay attention. But right now I think what he has said is completely wrong.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Attorney-General is a square peg in a round hole.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not want to get involved in this argument. I have no doubt at all but that there are some schools in the province which should be checked for obvious reasons. However, I do feel that, when a good job has been done, it should be mentioned, and I would like to bring a little personal incident into this discussion.

Just a week ago, I phoned the fire marshal and told him about a case in my own town of Wiarton, and I would like to say this to the hon. Attorney-General. Yesterday the hon. Attorney-General was a little bit cross with me, I hope today he has changed—for this reason—that I phoned the fire marshal and the next day he had an inspector in Wiarton, and they fixed the situation in the Wiarton public school, for which I thank him very much.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Chairman, this is not a loaded question: I have had some municipal experience. I would like to ask the hon. member for Essex North if he has any specific instance of where a school in this province is a fire trap due to the fact that the Ontario fire marshal's department has done nothing about it?

Mr. Reaume: Well, I would be awfully happy to answer that one. I have something here that I am going to file, but I do not expect that we are going to do anything about it until 10 people phone or until probably the whole school burns down.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member to answer that question.

Mr. Reaume: I have answered the question.

Mr. Lewis: Where?

Mr. Reaume: I have them here, I am going to file them.

Mr. Lewis: Is it a secret?

Mr. Reaume: I am going to file them.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, yes, you are.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Did I understand the hon. Attorney-General to say that there was not a fire in 40 years in a school in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I did not say that. I said no life was lost in a school fire.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General a question with regard to an organization, or a committee, that I saw mentioned in a news story recently. It was the government inter-departmental committee on fire safety.

Now, is this a committee that has jurisdiction over fire safety for government buildings only? Secondly, are the regulations that are laid down with regard to fire safety in the public buildings the same as those laid down in regard to private buildings throughout the province?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think the answer to that—if there is any question of getting it more accurately I will ask the fire marshal to give me a written answer on it—but the committee that was set up some few years ago has to do with government buildings only, and the requirements there are very comparable with the requirements that are set up for public buildings generally.

Mr. MacDonald: Specifically, are the requirements less for public buildings than for privately owned buildings?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I said they are substantially the same. If there is any need to get the regulations out and compare them, I will have the fire marshal do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, the reason why I raise this is that, after the hon. member for Woodbine and I paid a visit to the older wings of the Orillia Hospital a few weeks ago, I was very interested to note that inspectors were sent in to take a look at these buildings and two comments were made: One, that these were not fire traps; the second comment, which seemed to be somewhat in contradiction, was that they ordered a doubling of the night staff.

Therefore, presumably, they found that the regulations with regard to the possibility of a fire were not sufficient, or at least the staff was not sufficient, taking into account the people who are in these institutions.

I just want to submit to the hon. Attorney-General, because it seems to me that it must be the case—subject to any confirmation that he finds later when he looks into the details of it—that if the regulations of this inter-departmental committee, with regard to governments, are being enforced in Orillia, they must be away below the standards that are tolerated for private buildings.

I certainly have never been in any private building where they would tolerate 90 people being crowded into a limited space of one room, with the beds no more than the width between my hands apart, on a third floor room, in addition to being people with the physical disabilities of a retarded person.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I think the hon. member is probably confusing overcrowding, as he calls it, with fire precautions, but I do not think the two really are related in this connection.

However, if there is any question of comparison of actual regulations, I will be glad to get them and have them sent to the hon. member.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I observe in this vote that there is the tidy sum of something close to $600,000. I should like to inquire of the hon. Attorney-General something about the relationship of fire insurance companies to the fire marshal's office, in order to ascertain whether that expenditure is, in any way, increased by the use made of the fire marshal's services by the fire insurance companies.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that fire insurance companies are in the habit of asking or requiring the fire marshal's office, in many cases, to make an investigation of specific fires that have occurred. Apparently that office sends out one of its personnel, who appears to have some of the powers of a commissioner making an inquiry under The Public Inquiries Act, and he goes into a specific area and he gets the insured in, and swears him under oath, and asks him in great specific detail what the circumstances were that led to this fire.

Now, one can readily ascertain that the only reason that this individual would do this, at the behest of a fire insurance company would be, of course, to ascertain whether there was any ground for voiding the policy.

These are the specific questions that I should like to ask in relation to that practice:

I wonder, first, on how many occasions a year—with what frequency—do fire insurance companies avail themselves of the services of the fire marshal's office. I should like to ask secondly, whether the services of that office are granted to these companies merely upon their requesting them.

I should like to ask further whether the fire insurance company, before it can avail itself of the services of that investigator, must put some information before the fire marshal's office upon which it may find a bona-fide belief that there are some unlawful or improper circumstances behind the occurrence of the fire.

For I say, if that be not the case, then a great portion, I should think, of this $600,000 that this Legislature is being asked to vote, no doubt, is directly attributable to what I strongly suspect is a pretty free and easy availability of the services of this office to various fire insurance companies doing business in this province.

Unless these fire insurance companies can inform the fire marshal's office that they have reason to suspect there is something in the background of the fire which might lead to a criminal prosecution, then I say to the hon. Attorney-General that he should not allow the services of this office to be made available quite so freely to these companies.

In the alternative, if they do wish to make use of this office, then perhaps he might consider charging them a fee for those services.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that the fire marshal's staff do not make any investigation of fires unless they have prima-facie evidence of some criminality involved. How do they get it? There are many answers to that. But I would say that less than 10 per cent. of the initial inquiries causing them to move in relation to this field come from insurance companies.

The hon. member is probably aware that there is a premium charge on insurance companies for the purpose of obtaining funds to assist in the general work of fire prevention. The actual receipt by the government in that field of premiums is not very far off the figure for the cost of running this office.

But the hon. member suggests that there might be some connivance, or some action, detrimental to somebody, I suppose detrimental to a person who might be guilty of an offence. I do not know who else it might be detrimental to, in the getting of evidence to determine whether or not there has been a crime.

Mr. Reaume: May I come back for one minute to these schools? I do not want to argue about the subject all day, but I just want to ask this:

There are many, many schools in areas of the province where there is really no fire inspection at all. Nobody inspects them. This is especially true of the areas of which I speak. All I am asking the hon. Attorney-General is this, will he not have the fire marshal's office visit those areas? I will be glad to give them to him.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, if my hon. friend, on the responsibility of a member, has certain places he would like looked at, I will give him my assurance now—or if any other hon. member has a particular spot he wants looked at to the extent that we can do it—that we will certainly do it. I would not want in any way to walk in on local authority and appear to be intruding on their preserves. I think they should be told what is going to be done, and be quite ready to have it done.

Mr. Reaume: I do not think that is enough. I think that where the province is making grants to a school that they indeed have an interest in them, especially where lives of people are involved. If there is an area where there is no fire inspection at all, I do not think the hon. Attorney-General should have anybody write or anybody ask about them. I think he ought to go and inspect them, do something about it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I ask another question of the hon. member for Essex North? I am interested in this also.

Does he wish the Ontario fire marshal's department to superimpose themselves over the elected representatives, the school trustees, and force their way in, and tell them what they are going to do? Can I ask that question? Yes or no?

Mr. Reaume: I do not know from what part of the world the hon. member comes, nor do I know where he went to school, and I do not know how long he has been here.

Mr. Lewis: I just came yesterday.

Mr. Reaume: But there are laws in the province saying that the government of the province can step into the Windsor city hall and say: "Now, you have got a crack in the boiler."

Mr. Lewis: Is the hon. member talking about Windsor?

Mr. Reaume: Any place.

Mr. Lewis: Where?

Mr. Reaume: Here in Toronto, if you will.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, they come into Toronto?

Mr. Reaume: They can go to the city hall—the office of the mayor, if they want to—and say: "Your boiler is cracked, fix it or else."

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I asked a question of the chair before. Will the hon. member for Essex North please tell me where he would like the Ontario fire marshal's department to go?

Mr. Reaume: If I told him where I wanted him to go—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I know, but we can take that from the hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, might I ask one question of the hon. Attorney-General before we leave this?

Might I ask the hon. Attorney-General if he is satisfied that there are no instances in Ontario where schools are a fire hazard, more particularly in the areas where they do not have trained fire personnel within the counties?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. member for Dovercourt that when he asks me a question as to whether I am satisfied that there are no hazards, I would not put myself in the position of answering that directly. But I would say this, that I would hope that the responsible authorities throughout the province would be satisfied that there are none, or that if they are not, they would make it clearly understood.

I cannot imagine any people more interested in these children whom the hon. member for Essex North seems so concerned about—quite rightly as far as that goes—than the trustees and the people who have their own children in the schools. Gracious me, they know far more about what is needed in the area than Mr. Scott or any one of us here could possibly know.

If the public school inspector or if the separate school inspector, as he makes his inspections of schools—whether they be the smallest rural schools or the larger ones—sees anything which he thinks is a fire hazard, he reports it and inspection takes place by the fire marshal.

Mr. Reaume: I just want to point out once again, how foolish can you get? When the fire marshal comes into Windsor, he inspects our schools, he approves of our plans, he goes all through it. But, when it comes to some little place out in the woods, that has no building inspector, no fire marshal, no fire department, that place has to wait until such time as the place catches on fire and a number of little boys and girls are burned to death. I say this, that there is a responsibility upon the hon. Attorney-General and the only thing I am anxious to do is to get him removed if I can. I know it is a hard job.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I give the reason, based on experience, why we operate as we do? I could go back, sir, to the Moose Hall fire in Hamilton at which time the present Public Halls Act originated. We had an investigation by a judge at that time. The whole matter was carefully gone into, and very many recommendations were made.

As a matter of fact, in the end we found this, that there was no substitute for the local authority. The regulations that we made in connection with public halls were very, very few. They only involved these, that there should be two exits, and I think there were one or two other very small minimum requirements.

The reason why regulations were very few was because no one could devise a code that would meet conditions in the city of Toronto the city of Windsor and the township of Monmouth—to take a little pioneer township out of the number of townships we have.

The situation with the schools is similar. The schools are under the authority of the local boards. As a matter of fact, every public, separate and secondary school in this province is under the complete authority of the local board.

Now, I give the hon. member for Windsor due credit for the fact that he wants to do everything possible to protect life and limb, and for that I do not blame him. But may I point this out to him, that if the fire marshal's department, for instance, were to accept holus-bolus the inspection of 6,000 schools, big and little, in the province, all they would do is create a sense of false security on the part of those who are charged with authority—that is, the local school boards.

The minute they do that, instead of creating security, they take away from security. I think what we have endeavoured to do, regarding public buildings is to advise people, to advise boards, to advise public authorities as to minimum safety requirements, including exits and things of that sort.

To hand over the inspection of the 6,000 schools in this province, with all of their varying standards and conditions to the fire marshal, would not be an advance. As a matter of fact, the more we come to investigate this, we would find it to be a retrograde step. That is what we found regarding the public hall matter.

May I point out to the hon. member for Essex North that if he would go into his own riding, part of which no doubt is rural, he would find that, in the town of Riverside for instance, they probably have very good requirements. Now, their chief of police is a fire marshal's officer, and he has looked at things.

But if we go into some little township where there is a little Knights of Columbus hall, or an Orange hall or some community hall, we find that the inspection of those things, from a public hall standpoint alone, is impossible. From experience, we find that it is far better to keep the responsibility on the local authority.

Now, we found the same thing with churches. I would say that in this province, when one looks at churches, they will find very many different conditions. As a matter of fact, after a most thorough consideration of that problem, we feel that it would be a mistake to take the responsibility away from the church authorities themselves.

Now, I do think that, in connection with the matter of fire protection in schools, the fire marshal could make spot checks, as I think is done from time to time throughout the province, and advise trustee boards as to the conditions. But to assume that for all the thousands of boards in the province would not add up in the end to anything else but false security.

Now, that is the answer, and I personally went through that, to the fullest extent, in connection with the inspection of public halls in this province. As I say, in the end, the public hall problem is not as difficult because there are not as many of them, but nevertheless the tremendous variation and standards made a question of inspection—except on a very minimum basis—completely out of the question and completely impossible. Now, that was the beginning of that Act, and—

Mr. Reaume: Well, I agree, I agree. I am not trying to go over the heads of the reeves or the boards, but I wonder if I might not ask this. The department here, I think, has inspectors of education who go around and inspect these schools, and I am wondering if we could not co-ordinate, or could not work, between the fire marshal's office and the department, and where—in the opinion of the departments involved—they felt that this was a fire trap, that indeed, somebody should do something about it.

Now, I am not speaking of a place that is organized at all. I am talking about places out in the rural areas that have not got any fire departments. It appears that, in every area of the province, we do have an inspector of schools—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is the point. The school inspectors themselves do very often call upon the fire marshal for advice in connection with a particular situation, and they have the benefit of that. Now, that I think overcomes the obstacle that my hon. friend was mentioning.

The rule for years has been that inspection of the fitness of the premises is part of the job of school inspectors, and they report the matter to the local board, and if they are in doubt, they report it to the fire marshal. Then the fire marshal can make an inspection and advise them what to do.

Mr. Reaume: Yes, but I was wondering if the fire marshal's office might not, in some way, work out a deal, if you will, with The Department of Education and send out a notice to all inspectors that, as they go around, if they feel that a certain school is a fire trap, that something be done about it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, last year the fire marshal sent out 30,000 notices in connection with this thing. Now, may I just conclude this.

Mr. Reaume: Well, did the fire marshal have any answers at all back for them?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, if there is anything requiring to be done, they have been doing it. If the hon. member reads the report of the fire marshal, that comes out each year, he will see what they are doing. The trouble is the hon. member does not do that, and he comes in here and asks a lot of questions, of which really half of them are irrelevant. But I would like to say that, when he gives to the member for York-Humber or myself some specific cases that he wants looked into, with the consent of the local authorities concerned, we will look into them.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the hon. Attorney-General that the hon. member for Essex North is very sincere about this? He tells me privately that he has in mind certain schools, that are 50 or more years old, which have never been inspected.

Now, for the world of me, I cannot see what a school inspector is going to do. He told us about a fire in Buffalo, I think, out of our jurisdiction, of course. But if a similar one, in a small rural school—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Scott went to Chicago at the time of that big Chicago fire.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, exactly. That is the thing we do not want to happen here. I am not going to make a big issue about it. I am simply saying that I think the hon. member for Essex North is presenting a very good case. I do not think there is any point in us being so hot and bothered about it. If he can illustrate that there is a school housing upwards of 60 youngsters, built 50 or 60 years ago, that has never been inspected, Mr. Chairman, there is something wrong. And I simply say to you, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I asked him to produce—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Surely to goodness the hon. Attorney-General is not going to depend upon the hon. members of this House to ferret out these cases. If we can tell him of one, it should motivate him to do something to assure that those areas that are not inspected, in the routine fashion by local authorities, are somehow inspected for the safety of the youngsters involved.

Mr. Reaume: That is the point.

Vote 212 agreed to.

On vote 213:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This is the Ontario securities commission vote. There has been tabled in the House this session the report of the Ontario securities commission for 1959.

The commissioner appeared before the legal bills committee on Wednesday, March 2, 1960, when he was questioned concerning his department. In the absence of Mr. Lennox today, Mr. Duggan the registrar is here, and also Mr. Bray. The report was put on every hon. member's desk here, prior to the legal bills committee meeting, and I do not propose to repeat going into that material here today. But I will be glad to deal with any questions that I can.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise some issues in connection with this estimate. Last Thursday, I think for the first time in many years—exactly how many years I do not know—there was an opportunity for the legal bills committee to question the Ontario securities commissioner and some of the officials of the Toronto stock exchange.

I would like to say that the fact that this meeting was held was extremely commendable. But I must confess that I had some of the same feeling, in that meeting, as I sometimes have in this House. When one raises a point which one thinks is valid, it eventually gets buried in such paeans of praise about the way things are operating, that one wonders whether or not there was any validity in one's contention to begin with.

However, the interesting thing, Mr. Chairman, was that a day later, I picked up the Toronto Telegram and read a column written by the financial editor, the first three paragraphs of which I would like to read. This is by Devon Smith. It starts out:

Disappointing! That's what the hearing of the legal bills committee of the Ontario Legislature was when it examined the Ontario securities commission report. It was a love feast between OSC chairman Lennox and the governors of the Toronto stock exchange. Even the sharp mind and pertinent suggestions of the Attorney-General, Kelso Roberts, couldn't make headway against the hymns of co-operation being sung by the two sets of expert testifiers.

Now, that so exactly expressed my own feeling when I left this meeting, Mr. Chairman, that I am—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If my hon. friend would let me interject there, I am sure the only reason that he left as early as he did was that he must have had some other happier hunting ground to go to, because I cannot imagine him leaving in that sort of situation.

Mr. MacDonald: You know, Mr. Chairman, this is typical of the kind of comment that one expects from this government—specious, irrelevant, red-herringish and everything else.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): He only asked one question.

Mr. MacDonald: I was there for one hour and a half, from 10 to 11:30, and I asked more questions than anybody else.

Mr. Gould: He only asked one question.

Mr. MacDonald: I asked one question about 15 times. But if the hon. gentleman will forgive me, since he has interjected here, I will read one more paragraph from Devon Smith:

There is one giant anomaly in all this mutual admiration between the two bodies. CCF leader MacDonald struck right at it. Mr. Roberts implied his concern at it.

So if my one question was the only one that I asked, it was—at least in the view of this financial editor—a pertinent one. I left, Mr. Chairman, because I had an appointment with somebody in my office at 11:30, an hour and a half after the committee began. So let him not rush or jump to any hasty conclusions as to why I left.

Now, I want to come back to the point that I was raising. This question, which apparently is in the minds of a good many people in the financial world, is a very pertinent question. I refer to the conflict of interest involved in a situation in which, once stock has been listed on the Toronto stock exchange, supervision over that stock, and regulation with regard to that stock, do not rest any longer with the Ontario securities commission. They rest with the Toronto stock exchange.

Here we have a situation in which a group, which is described by the Financial Post, as well as by many other people, as a private club—the Toronto stock exchange—because it is closer to a private club than anything else, and the function of this private club is to do business in trading—and yet our Ontario securities commission hands over the very important task of protecting the investors of Ontario to this group whose chief function is to do business.

Here we have a sharp conflict of interest. On the one hand, their duty is to regulate, and to protect the people of the province of Ontario, the investors particularly. On the other hand, if they let these regulations become lax, they will open up the kind of traditional free-wheeling trading which is the whole heart and soul of the kind of business on the market. This is particularly true at the present time with the present bearish market in which some loosening of these regulations would restore the flow of business which these people are in the game for.

Now, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is an extremely important matter. I do not think there is any possibility of anybody sloughing it off as being the views of a few crank writers in Saturday Night, or a few people in the CCF. On the surface of it, there is obviously a serious conflict of interests.

I was interested, for example, in the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett) during the legal bills committee that this is the normal kind of conflict of interests that any businessman has, namely, the conflict between doing good on behalf of the community while not fleecing the public and promoting his own business.

I suggest, however, after further thought, that his comment was really not relevant, because it is one thing to have a businessman who has a social conscience, and therefore balances the promotion of his business, with doing it in a manner so that he is not exploiting the community. But surely, Mr. Chairman, there is a completely different situation in connection with the Toronto stock exchange where we have handed over from a public authority, the Ontario securities commission, the right to regulate in the financing of thousands of companies throughout the whole of our economy—indeed not only throughout the whole of our economy in the province of Ontario, but also the financing of companies that clearly span the whole of this nation from coast to coast.

I was interested, for example, in reading through paeans of praise, which constituted most of the news reports on the legal bills committee meeting the other day, to rescue from it one comment made by Mr. Lennox—and this is a direct quote because I took it down as he was saying it. It said this:

I am far from satisfied with the situation as it is today in the promotional field.

Now, that is in striking contrast to the love feast that we had there.

The other point that interested me was that I asked, as a final question before I had to leave, Mr. Chairman—because as far as I was concerned it summed up the earlier discussions and I knew we could come back to this issue here in the House—whether the officials of the Toronto stock exchange felt that the article called “The Strange Ways of the Toronto Market” in Saturday Night, of February 6, was inaccurately based. The answer was to the effect that they felt it was inaccurately based.

Now, I am not certain that it is inaccurate; in fact, I am convinced that it is not. I will agree that, in making generalizations with regard to the operations of the Toronto stock exchange, they are citing specific instances representing practices that may not apply to all.

I also agree that, in the last few years, industrials have tended to dominate the market rather than mining stock, and that this has taken us, to a degree, away from the kind of free-wheeling practices that we had in the past—for reasons that I want to come to in a moment.

But that still does not remove the fact that, in the operations of the Toronto stock exchange, there are promotional efforts on the part of certain mining stocks that are highly questionable. I am back to the basic point—whether or not the regulations, with regard to these, should be handed over to a private club, as it has been described, who have this conflict of interests of regulating on the one hand and on the other hand wanting to promote business upon which they survive.

Just listen to the first 3 paragraphs of the Saturday Night article on the Toronto stock exchange. Rather than just a bland dismissal of them, which was the kind of thing we tended to get the other morning in our legal bills committee, I would like some documentation to prove that such is not the case. I quote:

Because it permits primary distribution, the Toronto stock exchange enjoys the dubious distinction of being the world's largest gambling stock market.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is just an opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just a minute now. It is a pretty well documented opinion. Let me proceed:

Primary distribution, or sale of shares to the public, by a promoter of securities issue is not permitted on quality stock exchanges—such as the New York stock exchange —for the same reason that a bank does not run a lottery.

Now, that is merely an opinion, but I would ask the hon. Prime Minister to give some thought to that observation. It seems to me it is a valid one. And it goes on,

The real function of a stock exchange—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Of the United States of America.

Mr. MacDonald: The quotation reads on:

—of a stock exchange is to provide an open auction market for securities with sufficient distribution, so the prices reflect representative supply and demand. Without this general distribution, prices can be made by promoters to effect distribution. The exchange then sinks to the level of a jewellery auction dominated by schills and fast switches.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question I would like to put to the hon. Prime Minister, if he thinks that was only an opinion, is this. Does he deny that kind of promotion of stock still goes on in the Toronto stock exchange?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think it is an exaggeration.

Mr. MacDonald: Does he deny that the promotion of mining stocks on the Toronto stock exchange is not, in some instances, in the hands of the promoters?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I deny it.

Mr. MacDonald: He denies it. Well, that is interesting to have that observation on the record. Let me go on to another paragraph.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. MacDonald: It is all right for the hon. Prime Minister to mumble over there in his seat but, in effect, as he smiles and talks with the hon. Attorney-General, he is conceding the validity of a good deal of this. I am quoting still:

On Toronto Bay Street, the merchandising of cat-and-dog mining and oil securities via stock market plays has attained the status of a skilled trade. Listing on the Toronto stock exchange gives the promotion of stock the accolade of a seemingly spontaneous market. Actually, since the issue lacks distribution, the bids at least initially are almost exclusively the promoter's.

His technique—

I ask the hon. Prime Minister to give some consideration to this analogy which I suggest is valid —is not unlike that of the art dealer who bought 50 rare vases which had never before been on the market, and sold 10 of them to himself, through dummies, and thereby established a price at which the entire lot could be moved.

Listing also publicizes an issue. Its quotation will henceforth be beamed to the public via the stock exchange list in the daily press—

And this seems to be another key point:

People to whom it is tipped will see it quoted cheek by jowl with Bell Telephone Company and International Nickel. They will be left to infer that its price is of the same uncontrived nature as Bell Telephone. They will not be told that a promoter is activating the stock on the tape, nor that it enjoys supporting bids generated by boiler rooms pushing the stock over the long distance telephone—blower—to a sucker list with entries as far away as California.

Well, I do not want to go on quoting at further length, because I think I have made the case that it is not possible to dismiss this in a bland fashion; that if we get down to details, we cannot deny that these practices exist for the operations within the Toronto stock exchange, with regard to at least some of the stocks that are promoted.

I am not talking about the industrials, I am not even talking about the established mining stocks. I am talking about these penny stocks that come on the market, particularly in the early stages of their financing.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All that is against the rules of the exchange.

Mr. Bryden: No—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am just telling him that. And disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. MacDonald: I suggest if there is going to be any disciplinary action, then it should be done by a public body fixed with the responsibility of protecting the investors of the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would not agree with that at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Despite Mr. Lennox's comment the other day—the significance of which, quite frankly, baffled me—when he said that they do not really delegate the responsibilities to the Toronto stock exchange, I do not know how that can be argued. In his own annual report, a copy of which the hon. Attorney-General tabled, on page 4, it reads:

Under the provisions of section 41 of the Ontario Act, securities listed and posted for trading on a recognized stock exchange need not be qualified by the commission. Now, that is as clear as crystal.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, that is what—

Mr. MacDonald: Section 41 says that once it is listed on the stock exchange, the regulation over that stock is handed over to the Toronto stock exchange.

However, the next point I want to draw to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, is this: That I was interested in a couple of paragraphs, by way of argument, to justify the operation of the Toronto stock exchange in the report that was presented by the officers of the Toronto stock exchange to the committee the other day. They said this:

As far as the financing of industrial companies is concerned, there is fundamentally no difference in the functions of the Toronto stock exchange and most other North American exchanges. It is where mining financing is involved, however, that these functions vary at least in degree if not in kind.

To do its job thoroughly, the Canadian mining industry is in constant need of a new capital in amounts that transcend, pro rata, those of practically any other industry.

In the sense of security issuance, Canada is a frontier country since a great portion of its stock issues are made in connection with the development of natural resources.

Because of these conditions, and to further the Canadian mining industry, the Toronto stock exchange must function in a much more fluid, or less restrictive manner, in regard to its mining listings, than with regard to listings of companies engaged in business other than mining, commonly referred to as industrial.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to suggest to this House that that represents living in the past. It is a concept which is out of date.

I want to suggest to this House that we have passed the stage in this country where we have to argue that we are a frontier economy where, for reasons which are euphemistically described as providing a more flexible approach or a more fluid approach to financing, we leave the door open to the kind of fraudulent tactics that sometimes go on in the promoting of these stocks.

Not only do we have normal procedures for stock distribution in industrials, which means that we must have sufficient distribution of it that there is a market price which reflects the law of supply and demand, but I suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that, in a growing proportion of our mining companies, they are being handled on much the same basis as are the industrials.

In other words, we have passed this wide-open frontier approach where prospecting is a sort of weekend venture.

True, Manitouwadge was the product of "weekend prospectors," as it is termed in the trade. But the significant thing today is that most of our development is done by airborne surveys. In the instance of a growing proportion of the companies which are really intent on developing our resources—and not just a "fast buck" for somebody promoting a stock—they are financed on the same basis as industrials. They do not have to resort to these cat-and-dog tactics, as referred to in this article in Saturday Night.

In many instances, Mr. Chairman, the point that we should bear in mind is that, in the stocks that are handled by this flexible approach—this so-called fluid approach—the promoters of these stocks are not interested in developing the resources of this nation. They are interested in promoting a stock in a manipulated fashion so that they can fleece a lot of innocent people in this province and make a lot of money quickly.

And I think that this is the area where conflict of interest on the part of the Toronto stock exchange inhibits them from cleaning this situation up, and where it becomes the obligation of the Ontario securities commission, as the public regulatory body, to step in.

I want to make a suggestion as a conclusion to these observations, and I would be curious to know what the hon. Attorney-General's comments are. I suggest that, since we have now reached the more mature stage in our economic development where industrials, and where a great proportion of serious mining companies that are out to develop resources do handle their financing on a basis that would be beyond question—and certainly would be living within the regulations—I suggest that perhaps we have reached the stage where the regulations should stipulate that the Toronto stock exchange should cease the primary distribution of stock.

In other words, should we not—as is the case with what is known as quality exchanges, like the New York stock exchange—restrict the trading on the Toronto stock exchange to secondary trading of stocks that have been established, so that the people know that the price is a meaningful price?

I would like to have the comments of the hon. Attorney-General as to why that should not be done at the present time. For I suggest this—I do not state it dogmatically, because this is so complex a picture I think it is perhaps difficult to anticipate all the consequences—but one of the things that has always intrigued me in Canadian economy is the fact that we have had to rely to such a great extent on outside capital to develop Canadian resources. It used to be British capital, now it is American capital.

We live in a country with growing financial resources, yet in the last few years it was American capital that developed Kitimat. It is American capital that has developed Ungava. It is American capital that has developed the trans-Canada pipe line. In all of these new thrusts forward, in our economic development, it is American capital that is doing it.

I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, whether a great deal of money that is available in Canada for investment, and which the most respectable investing houses in this country are hesitant to suggest that the possible investors should invest in Canadian development, is not going elsewhere, going outside of this country. It is going outside of this country because of the fact that we leave such conditions to persist so that there are a lot of people who are profoundly unhappy with the securities business, unhappy with the failure to enforce regulations to get rid of promotion which has nothing to do with the development of resources at all.

I say this in conclusion—and invite the hon. Attorney-General again to make comments—that there is a great proportion of people in the financial world who—while they may disagree with some of the arguments in the Saturday Night presentation, and may think it is exaggerated in part—will agree that basically the situation which the Saturday Night articles were attempting to get at is valid. If it is valid, then I think it is the responsibility of this government to take cognizance of it and act.

I suggest that the way it should take cognizance of it is to make regulations that would stop primary distribution on the Toronto stock market, and reclaim to the Ontario securities commission the full responsibility for regulatory powers instead of the present situation in which they delegate those powers to the Toronto stock exchange.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman; I rise at this time, not to take part in any castigation or defence of either the Ontario securities commission or of the Toronto stock exchange. But I do want to say at this time that I would not like to have this House get the impression there were any paeans of praise, or any great love feast, that took place between the members of the legal bills committee and either the members of the Toronto stock exchange or the Ontario securities commission.

Mr. MacDonald: I was reading Devon Smith.

Mr. Lawrence: The hon. member for York South, who had to leave that committee meeting at about the half-way mark in that committee, he said he had an appointment. I do not know, but by the sound of that columnist, it may be that that appointment must have been with the columnist who wrote that article—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member has no right to rise and insinuate and indulge in innuendoes. I have never met Mr. Devon Smith in my life.

Mr. Lawrence: My point in rising, Mr. Chairman, is merely to point out that, in the last half of that committee meeting—now it may have only been coincidental that the hon. member was not there—but in the last half of that committee meeting, we had a very searching examination of the members of the Toronto stock exchange who were good enough to be there, as well as the commission chairman.

Some very constructive questions were asked, some very constructive work was done. Also, a great deal of criticism of the Toronto stock exchange did come out—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the financial editor did not hear it.

Mr. Lawrence: —and the hon. member should also be fair enough to read some of the news reports that appeared in the papers, instead of one columnist. There are other columnists who were there, and who wrote different articles. As I say, I am not here to defend the commission or anything else. I am here to defend the fair name of the legal bills committee, as the chairman and I think everybody else in that committee was given a chance to ask any questions, and it was a very good committee meeting, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this, I think this is indicative of the freedom of speech in the Legislature.

Actually, on the particular vote that we are on, I do not know that the Toronto stock exchange directly comes into it. But I think it was a good idea perhaps to air the subject, although it was done in a much more businesslike manner in front of the legal bills committee when people, who could answer and tell the situation from their own practical workings of it, were available to give the story.

The hon. member for York South stayed for about half time, as the hon. member for St. George has said, and I must say again that I am surprised the hon. member, or somebody from his group did not stay. But the hon. gentleman from Hamilton East (Mr. Davison) walked out with him, so whether they both had the same appointment or not, I do not know.

At any rate, a lot of good information came forth after the hon. member left, as well as before.

Mr. Chairman, back in 1946, I think it was, The Ontario Securities Act, as we have it today in practically every detail, and which was introduced by the late Leslie Blackwell when he was Attorney-General, was debated in this House very thoroughly. If my recollection is correct, I think that I debated it very critically in a lot of respects, in order to try to get the best we could out of the discussions at that time and get them translated into the bill.

The House unanimously—I think I am correct in saying this, and the hon. Prime Minister probably recalls that, too—I think I can say that the House unanimously passed this Act, and at that time there were quite a number of hon. members of the same political party as my hon. friend now leads in this House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Twenty-one of them at that time.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Twenty-one of them, they actually constituted the official Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They have gone downhill since then.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This bill at that time was settled in this form, and passed by the House unanimously, if my recollection is correct.

The provision in that Act was that the stock exchange, within the requirements of the Act, would have certain powers and would do certain policing of its own. One of them was in relation to qualification of the securities of a company which was listed on the exchange.

I do not want to labour this, but I would like to make this quite clear, that, under the Act, any initial offering of shares of a company had to be qualified by the securities commission under the provisions of the Act, and that would be where the first financing would be done.

Then, when that company had advanced somewhat, and got itself in a position to justify an application to the Toronto stock exchange, if it decided that was in its interest to do so, certain things were required in the way of evidence of funds in hand, and properties and so forth, and ventures, before the Toronto stock exchange would accept the application for listing.

Once the stock exchange accepted the application for listing, then the trading was on the exchange.

Again, in order that we do not get out of proportion in these things, the bulk of the stocks that go on the stock exchange in that way, and have any final success at all in relation to their project, do not have that type of primary distribution, or rarely have it, in the same way that the company which goes on the exchange and then its whole original effort is lost.

Let us say it is a mining company, and the venture in a mine does not turn out successfully, and the property has become again—what it has been for centuries—something of no value. Then there is enough left, in the interest of the shareholders and the interest of the company, to try to find some other venture.

It is at that point that an attempt might be made to refinance, and if the company happens to be listed on the stock exchange at that time, then they may do so in accordance with the requirements of the exchange without going back to the securities commission.

That was the set-up of the Act, and that is the way it has been operating. When some of the events that are the subject of the article that my hon. friend has been reading occurred, there was unquestionably a period when a lot of criticism could be levelled at the way those things were being done.

In order to get this in proper proportion, it is only fair to say that, since about January 1, 1958, the Toronto stock exchange made great changes. I think I said something about it in the House at the time when we were in session here. They made great changes in their procedures, and we were assured by the securities commissioner that, with those changes, he was satisfied that these types of transactions would be carried through on the Toronto stock exchange satisfactorily.

I do not say that they all have been since that time. But I say that we must, in relation to that article—to be fair at all—take into account the procedures that have been going on in the stock exchange, the forms they are requiring, and the information and questionnaire and so forth that they have required in relation to primary distribution, since that time.

It is true, as the hon. member said, that there really is no statutory or other supervision over the exchange. In that respect, it is different from the statutory control over national exchanges which constitute all but about half a dozen in the United States that The Securities Exchange Act has.

Mr. MacDonald: How does the hon. Attorney-General justify that?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, it might well be that the study and the work that is now going on in this field by way of complete inquiry—and we are making that—may show that some such control as that ought to be superimposed over the exchange.

In the meantime, the work that is now proceeding may well lead to even further changes, internally, that will also indicate to the public—and that is where the indication should be—that the exchange is carrying on an impartial, a fair and a disinterested job.

That is important, and I hope that if there is any real need for that, that it will be evidenced. I think that this study that is now proceeding will, in a dispassionate way, get at the real facts, and find out what the real needs are—better than perhaps just flare-ups about extreme cases.

I can assure my hon. friend, and I can assure this House, that we will make a thorough inquiry into all of this in the way in which we have now started it, on which some evidence was given by the work of that legal bills committee the other day. That did not end it at all. We are proceeding with these inquiries and, in due course, recommendations will be forthcoming.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the hon. Attorney-General how many licences this commission issued last year and how many licences were cancelled?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think that is in the report, is it not? Mr. Chairman, I think it is set out in the report. The figure in my mind was about 380 brokers and investment dealers, and 2,122 employed in the sales force, so they would all be licenced.

As to prosecutions, the actual numbers are set out in the report which my hon. friend has.

I think my hon. friend asked about cancellations. Does he refer to cancellations or suspensions?

Cancellations, I think, are on page 13 of the report under disciplinary action: cancellations 3, suspensions 3, registrations refused 5. Under section 19, these 3 orders, which are—

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, the problem—

Hon. Mr. Roberts:—being deprived, just let me finish, being deprived of the right of certain exemptions; 7 additional ones, there were 10 reviews by the full commission of which 6 were allowed. There were no appeals to the supreme court of Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Chairman, the problem that is inherent, in this exchange and its operation, can hardly be solved by the answer to the question of why the hon. member for York South was not at the committee meeting held a couple of weeks ago.

We like to think of our good relations with the United States and its citizens, and we are prone to call them our cousins, and to be proud of the fact that we have got along so well together for so many years in sharing this continent.

Mr. Chairman, I know of no small minority group in the whole of this country, that does more to make bad relations with the citizens of the great country to the south of us, than that small minority of brokers down on Bay Street that promote their phony mining stocks, and sell them to the citizens of that country.

Now, we know for many years the government at Washington has been trying to come to some sort of an arrangement with our government at Ottawa, whereby they might set up some system whereby they could extradite some of the citizens of this province who have been guilty of engaging in the nefarious activities of promoting their paper, which is relative to a piece of moose pasture, perhaps up in northern Ontario or northern Manitoba. But, so far, they have been unable to come to any type of agreement.

Therefore, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the duty upon the Ontario securities commission, in trying to eradicate that type of person from carrying on his business down on Bay Street, becomes all the more important.

Now, I daresay that this type of exchange that we have here would hardly be possible in any other country than Canada, for this reason, that the incidence of the finding of minerals in the Laurentian shield is so erratic that any type of exploration or development programme, in the search for minerals in this shield, must of necessity be a great gamble in itself. I do not think I will be too far wrong in saying that, of about every 5,000 mining companies that are formed and stock issued and sold in them, about one eventually becomes a producing mine.

An hon. member: He is right.

Mr. Sopha: Exactly, it is only in very limited areas that I ever agree with the "5 pharisees," but I must say that, in this area, they are substantially correct.

Mr. MacDonald: He certainly agrees with the Tories in his smearing.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let me say that if I have fallen victim of copying some of the methods of the hon. member for York South then I will try, Mr. Chairman, to eradicate them by a system of self-criticism and self-appraisal.

However, what he has said about this group being interested only in the promotion of their stock is, I think, to a great extent accurate. There are people in operation on Bay Street, who have operated there for a number of years, who are not concerned whether the property ever develops into a mine.

An hon. member: Very true.

Mr. Sopha: They are concerned only with the promotion of that stock, in inflating its value, and getting rid of the amount they hold themselves at, of course, an increased value.

And to this end, I am told by people who have worked down there—and I see this in operation—that it is really remarkable to see the flood of literature go out. It goes out like the flow of the tide, and it washes as far as California.

And then, all they have to do is wait and the tide starts to come in, through California, Nevada, Idaho, Utah, Michigan. The cheques, the money orders, the postal notes, come into Toronto here and, in due course, they send them out this fine-looking share certificate, and after that it is followed by glowing descriptions of what is going on.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, it is no exaggeration to say that, in 1954, when they were building the subway down Yonge Street, and they had that pile driver on Yonge Street—I think it was just about a little south of Eaton's at that time—the pile driver was pounding away outside.

Inside an office close-by was a bucket shop operator, on the phone, and he was talking to a prospect in Colorado and he said: "Here we are at the mine head." Then he held the phone toward the window and he said: "There the shaft is down about 400 feet."

Well, I suppose, his prevarication was not total, because the shaft he meant was the one they were driving into the ground then. But that is the way it works, and that is the way it has worked for a number of years.

I think it must be 6 or 7 years ago that I heard the securities commissioner say in public—he did not say that he did not want to be quoted—but it is the same man who occupies that office today. I heard him say that his staff was too small to keep control over this group on Bay Street, the minority that engaged in these nefarious activities.

I wonder, in those 6 or 7 years, how greatly his staff has increased in order to allow him to carry out the proper job.

I notice that, in comparing the amount estimated for the fire marshal and the amount estimated for the Ontario securities commission, it appears to be just a little less than half of that. Surely, in the respective duties that they have to perform, if one can make a comparison, the duties must certainly be of an equal measure.

I want to say just one further word in respect of it, and that is I think some immediate steps should be taken in order to eliminate that type of person. I go this far with the hon. member for York South that it seems that a person who takes a gun into a bank and sticks up the teller and says, "Give me all the $20 bills in the cash box," if he is caught, society sees fit to put him in jail for 15 or 20 years, and it is proper that society should do so.

But if a person can concoct the nefarious games to sell wallpaper, in the form of mining stock, to widows and orphans, or to the residents of the United States, then surprisingly enough, in many cases I daresay, the person that could perfect that scheme, and has perfected it, would end up as the president of the service club or perhaps an elder of the church.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member think he might end up as the rector's warden?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General to outline the distribution requirements that now exist on new issues that are put on the Toronto stock exchange. What distribution do they have to have in order to qualify for listing?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, well, that was pretty well taken care of at the meeting the other day.

Mr. Bryden: I am not on the legal bills committee.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member wants a copy of the questionnaire, I am sure we can get him one from the Toronto stock exchange. But they have a very elaborate questionnaire. Whether it is sufficient or not may be open to question, but it certainly is quite elaborate in the requirements.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, the hon. member for Woodbine is out of order, completely, on asking for forms of the Toronto stock exchange.

Mr. Bryden: I am not asking for forms, I am just asking for the requirements. After all, surely, if this Legislature has delegated a public function to the Toronto stock exchange, we should have some report on how it carries out its public duties. I submit—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not know of any better possible chance of getting a report than to have the people come as they did, on invitation, to stand there and come before the legal bills committee, and answer any questions that were put to them. Now, they are the people who could tell him all this. But he was not on legal bills, nor was he there. The two hon. gentlemen of his party who came, left about half-way through.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it would be a good idea if we dealt with the issues that were being raised instead of a whole lot of side issues.

Now, it happens that I am not a member of the legal bills committee. It happens further, that I have quite a job keeping up with the committees of which I am a member. When I have a meeting of a committee of which I am a member, I can hardly get to some other committee meeting. That surely does not make any sense at all.

To suggest that I was not at the legal bills committee meeting, and therefore, I cannot ask for information in committee of supply, seems to me to be quite ridiculous. At any rate, I got no answer to my question. I asked the question out of a genuine desire for information.

It is possible that the information I have is not absolutely accurate, and before I said anything, I wanted to get the hon. Attorney-General's answer to make sure I was correct. The hon. Attorney-General either does not know what the requirements are, or he just does not consider it appropriate to announce them at this time. I am suggesting—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Again may I say that information was given fully before the legal bills committee.

Mr. Bryden: So what? I am asking for it to be given here. At any rate, I am suggesting to the hon. Attorney-General that the requirements—and I am not now talking about forms, which no doubt are an important instrument in putting requirements into effect, but are not the requirements themselves—the requirements are quite inadequate to insure that a stock, when listed, will actually have a true market price and not some manipulated price.

There is not sufficient distribution of the stocks, or anything like sufficient distribution, before they are listed, to insure that the price at which they go on the market is a true price, determined by actual supply and demand, and not by some efforts of some promoters, who as the hon. member for Sudbury suggested, are often much more interested in making quick profits than in developing any properties.

I would like to back up the suggestion made tentatively by my hon. leader (Mr. MacDonald)—not as a final suggestion but as something that should be considered—that very serious consideration should be given to prohibiting primary distributions on the Toronto stock exchange altogether.

The sort of stocks that are being traded, certainly in periods of market activities on that exchange, would not qualify even for the New York curb.

People suggest to us that this is the way to raise money for development. Well, I am suggesting that we should very seriously consider the other side of the coin, that this may be the way to destroy the raising of money for development.

Anybody who has paid any attention to this matter at all knows that Toronto has a terrible reputation, and we are not going to get investors investing when the Toronto stock exchange and the stock dealers—or many of them in the city of Toronto—have the reputation that they have in other parts of the North American continent. People are losing confidence, and are not going to invest their money when they feel there is a danger that they are going to be fleeced.

One of the most unfortunate parts of the whole thing is that we have speculative stocks that have no backing behind them at all, and no true market price, being listed along with Inco, or Bell Telephone, or Imperial Oil, or all sorts of well-established stocks with well-established market prices.

This procedure gives the impression that the prices, for some of these promotional efforts, are established in the same way as the prices of Imperial Oil, or Inco, or that sort of stock. Now, that sort of thing is a deception of the public.

The prices, in many cases, are not established by any free market operation, and I submit that the regulations that are now in effect, with regard to the listing of new offerings, do not insure in any significant way that the price, at which they get quoted, is a true market price representing the activities of a large number of buyers and sellers.

It is not good enough, I submit, to come in here and pull across the path a red herring to the effect that somebody is casting reflections on the legal bills committee, which nobody did, or to suggest that, "Well now, this thing is very nicely in hand, and if you will just be patient and wait, there are some inquiries going on and later we will have some results." This is a very serious problem right now, and I submit that it requires serious attention.

Perhaps the key to the whole problem is this business of public control over an important phase of the operation having been delegated to the Toronto stock exchange. That may be the answer. Perhaps the answer is also in the area that the hon. member for Nipissing suggested—

Mr. Troy: Sudbury.

Mr. Bryden: Sudbury, I am sorry—that the hon. member for Sudbury suggested. There should be greater activity and better standards on the part of the Ontario securities commission. Those are both areas where there should be improvement.

But the point is that it is time that the matter was faced up to seriously, and we should not forever be given this bland assurance that, "Oh well, everything is all right, just do not worry about it." It is a very serious problem which an increasing number of people are getting worried about. I only regret that the government seems to be among the few people who are not worried about this problem.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to ask the hon. Attorney-General a specific question.

In the legal bills committee—while I was there, Mr. Chairman—I got clarification on a point, namely that there is no stock distribution without at least 1 million of the shares being out in circulation, out of a 3.5 million to 4 million issue.

Now, I am told by people who are in the business day after day that this is meaningless, that what happens is that they have one million shares out, but that they are endorsed back so they are held by a very few people.

In fact, it is a very common practice that when they come into their office on Bay Street some morning, they may have a certificate stuck under their nose in the morning, a certificate made out to them to be endorsed back, so that, while nominally one million shares are out, it is in the hands of a very few people.

Now, I want to ask the hon. Attorney-General, who refuses to discuss the regulations—indeed, I wonder if he knows what they are, but he refuses to discuss them—what assurance is there that, when there are allegedly one million shares out in distribution, they have not been endorsed back so that they are in the hands of a few people who are in a position to manipulate the stock?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, of course, again I say—as I said earlier—that we are looking into all this, and moving towards a thorough examination. I know that it would be impossible for me to convince my hon. friend that even a reasonable percentage—

Mr. MacDonald: Just convince some others who are in the business. Do not mind me.

Hon. Mr. Roberts—are honest. But I still, after the few years I have been in this House, I am still prepared to believe and to act on that belief that the great majority of my fellow citizens are honest. There are a few crooks, and we will try to get the few crooks. But I will not be a party to besmirching a whole industry—

Mr. MacDonald: I suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that he might sit down and preach his sermons on the weekend—instead of indulging in this kind of thing. Let him just deal with the issue.

The point I want to submit to the hon. Attorney-General is this—he is moving slowly to come to grips with an issue, but if he were really intent on coming to grips with the issue, he would deal with this small minority which is blackening the name of the Toronto stock exchange, which is blackening the securities field in Canada, which is blackening the name of Toronto—and, as the hon. member for Sudbury said—does more to destroy good relationship with the United States than maybe any other single factor.

So he should not ignore this small group of promoters. It is another case of what I was talking about yesterday—of legalized robbery. If he wants to tolerate this legalized robbery, then let him go ahead and tolerate it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I wish to goodness the hon. member could get a little bit of truth behind his arguments.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No one has to listen to the capulous nonsense he talks about.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: However, I will say that I would not want anyone to think that I do not believe that these hon. gentlemen probably have an element of real desire to reform, in what they say—

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no, they just sit and smear and throw mud and—

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, thank you, the hon. Prime Minister is the master smearer.

Hon. Mr. Frost: —and talk dirty about—

Mr. Bryden: What an exhibition the hon. Prime Minister is putting on.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is why they have only 5 in the House. That is why, that is the reason.

Mr. MacDonald: Well one day the hon. Prime Minister's group will be reduced to 5.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That will take a long time.
Vote 213 agreed to.

On vote 214:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 214 deals with the inspector of legal offices.

Some success has been achieved in promoting new and necessary additions to courthouses, and at present there are 3 new ones under construction in the counties of Grey, Hastings and Lambton. Lincoln county also is going ahead with a site, when a site can be agreed upon.

Additions have been added to the courthouse facilities in the counties of Middlesex, Simcoe and Stormont, and substantial additions to the courthouse in Sudbury have been completed. A new registry office is open in Peel country, and presently new registry offices are under construction in the counties of Grey, Hastings, Lambton and Peterborough.

Efforts are being continued to bring more Crown attorneys into the full-time salaried class. There are 10 more full-time Crown attorneys now than was the case when I took office. Out of 48 Crown attorneys, there are 18 only now still remaining on a fee basis.

There are 26 assistant Crown attorneys, 18 of whom are full time and salaried.

Fees in the sheriffs and local registrars, county court clerks and surrogate court registrars' offices show a moderate increase over last year, as do the fees in the local masters of titles' offices.

Land transfer tax collected through the registry offices is up approximately $400,000 in 1959.

Although percentages to division court clerks and bailiffs were increased two years ago, the division court fees will show an increase. Generally speaking, the service rendered to the public by the officials in the outside offices has been good.

Mr. Donald, the inspector of legal offices, and his staff are entitled to be commended for the work they have been doing. Mr. Donald is here today, and is known to very many of the hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to continue a matter that I started under vote 201. At the time the hon. Attorney-General said I should bring it up under vote 214. I am not quite sure myself how it fits into vote 214, but that is where he suggested I should take it up, so I will deal with it here.

It is on the question of small claims, of recovering small claims—not only small debts but also claims for damages. I do not think this has to be a matter of controversy.

I would merely like to make a suggestion to the hon. Attorney-General that he might consider the experiments that are being conducted in the province of Saskatchewan, which does so much pioneering in so many fields and which this government has seen fit to imitate in such important matters as hospital insurance.

It is possible that the experiment they are trying to conduct there would simplify and reduce the cost of procedures for recovering small claims, and may be worth study. I will not go into the details here, but I would merely suggest that the hon. Attorney-General might consider that possibility.

As I said yesterday when I first tried to raise this matter, I feel myself, from my own experience—regarding people who have come to me—that there is quite a serious problem in regard to trying to collect a claim of somewhere less than $200. In a great many cases, people just give up because they feel that the cost and trouble of collecting does not repay them.

It is possible that, in this field, the existing laws and procedures can be improved.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: In answer to the hon. member, we have that under consideration.

Actually, the last survey that was made on it was about a year ago, and at that time, with 29 of 37 counties reporting, 6 were in favour, 11 had reservations, and 12 were opposed. Seven of 11 districts were canvassed; 2 were in favour, 3 had reservations, and 2 were opposed.

The opinion is pretty divided on it, because there are a number of factors that come into it, including the question of corresponding increase to be allowed for court costs and counsel fees, which is not too desirable, in some respects.

Provision might have to be made also for examination for discovery in division courts, if we raise these amounts very much, and there are a lot of angles to it—there are two sides to the story, let us say.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if the situation exists where people who are applying for their citizenship in the county courts, and who come there to assume the privileges and responsibilities of a Canadian citizen—if these people, in some cases, are being charged by county courts in order to get county court revenue, in addition to the regular cost of getting their citizenship papers? Are there cases of county courts doing this, and does it vary in various county courts?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I think the answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that prior to January 1, 1957, the clerks of the peace and county court clerks, when requested by the applicants, prepared the papers and made a charge on the applicant. This charge was considered a perquisite of office, and not as a revenue to the province.

Regulations were passed in July 1956 providing that clerks, when requested by the applicant, shall fill in the application, take the affidavit, and have the applicant sign the application in his presence; the only fee payable to the clerk shall be the fee provided for in section 3 of schedule B of the regulations. The fee provided by section 3, schedule B, is $10, and this fee must be remitted in full to the inspector of legal offices.

Vote 214 agreed to.

On vote 215:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 215, Mr. Chairman, is in relation to criminal justice accounts. We have Miss Parkhill, as the branch head, here.

The audit of the monthly administration of justice accounts in the unorganized districts is the chief work, as well as keeping the accountable advances in monthly balance with the bank manager certificates for the districts.

Also included are audits of monthly expense accounts of the magistrates; audit of juvenile family courts in the unorganized districts; preparation of requisitions and statements required; preparing public accounts for criminal justice and the elections; audit of accounts in the counties under section 11 of The Administration of Justice Expenses Act.

Also there are the coroners' accounts, mental hospital inquests, investigations and bringing persons back to trial.

That is the sum and substance of the work of that office.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, my question concerns item No. 9 of vote 215. I take it that this sum makes up the costs involved in expenses, warrants and summons regarding deserted wives and children—that is, for the issuing of the warrants and carrying out the warrant or summons.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to raise a point that gave me some concern in regard to desertions. I have had several cases of attempting to obtain relief, through the municipal authorities, for wives who have been deserted.

Two particular cases involved teen-agers—the wife was a teen-ager—and it was in the first year of marriage. I found, through making application to the authorities that they first had to swear out a warrant for the husband's arrest under desertion before help could be obtained from the municipal authorities.

Now, that was in order, but I inquired further as to what happens now.

The indication I got from the investigators was that not very much would happen now.

What I mean is, I wonder what kind of an effort would be put forward in trying to apprehend the deserting husband and bring him back to appear before a judge or a family court, or whatever it might be.

In the two cases, on further inquiry, I found that there is not too much attention paid in trying to apprehend deserting husbands.

It rather concerned me. I do not know which authority's responsibility it would be to do something about this—but in the case of youngsters, that is, teen-age couples, and the desertion happens in the first year or the second year of marriage—it is important that there should be considerable effort put into bringing back the husband, so that the people concerned could make effort at reconciliation of their problem before it gets worse.

I would just like some comment on why I receive the impression that the authorities just do not seem to bother about trying to find them. I know, in the one specific case that I followed up, that the young chap was in the city when he was supposed to appear before the judge. He did not. He showed up at the house shortly after.

In the other case, the chap had a job in Belleville, and I felt that, if he could have been apprehended and brought back to people who know how to deal with these cases, the couple could be helped to reconcile their problems before the situation reached a state where there is no hope of reconciliation.

I just wonder why officials do not make the same effort to bring these young chaps back, and do something for them, as is made in the case of robbery or other cases.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I would say that effort is constantly being made to do this very thing. But the type of persons with whom the authorities are dealing very often are the type who are completely irresponsible, and who take sometimes a pleasure in just moving from place to place just ahead of the order. So those are the sort of difficulties that the enforcement officers have.

I think in this field, the figures for the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance orders from other provinces shows that there is a good deal of work being done, and actual results are being obtained.

For example, in 1959, there were 110 new orders received here from other provinces for effecting, and new orders were forwarded from this jurisdiction to the other provinces, to a total of 123.

Eleven of them went out to the Yukon Territory, and several went to as far abroad as England, Northern Ireland, Guernsey and other places—even one to the Isle of Man and one to Malta. So there is a lot of reciprocal work going on in collections in far parts of the earth, but the catching up with a few of the offenders is a difficult problem at times.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. Attorney-General say earlier today that he and the government were most interested in the improvement of justice in this province. Some weeks ago, I put a question on the order paper to the hon. Attorney-General regarding an appointment in Simcoe county, and I was told that such an appointment was under The Judicature Act, and he privately told me that such was by statute and that no opportunity is given to a civil servant to apply.

I read about the appointment in the Toronto Globe and Mail, and I can only conclude that the qualification that the young man who was appointed had was that he had been an active Progressive-Conservative ever since he was a teenager.

While north last weekend, I noticed that there was an appointment made to a similar office in Sudbury, and again the qualifications were somewhat the same. But this appointee had probably worked a little harder for the cause, because he was a defeated Conservative candidate.

Meritorious and estimable as these qualifications may seem to be, I do not think, sir, that, in regard to magistrates, they should be the factor.

Mr. Chairman, you will no doubt recall that, about this time last year, there was a vacancy in a certain magistrate's court in a riding adjacent to my own.

I understand that several lawyers had applied, and were willing to accept the office, and any one of them was a candidate acceptable to the local bar. I understand further that some assurance was given that one of these would be chosen.

Shortly afterwards the appointment was made, and who should he be? Again a Conservative, and one who had gone well beyond the course of duty—he had been defeated in two elections.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. Troy: It seems to me that that, sir, is not seeking to improve—with all due respect to the magistrates who sit on the bench who are not lawyers—there is a very good friend of mine, I notice, in the House today and I am sure that he has a fund of good common sense—but if it is at all possible, I think a magistrate should be one trained in law, and have the knowledge of the law. I think that we can improve the course of justice, in the future, if such appointees are made with that qualification.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, under vote 215, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General a question. Regarding the fines collected in magistrates' courts, how are they spent? What amount is rebated back to municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Sixty per cent.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question with respect to the juvenile courts. I wonder, first of all, if any child who is waiting to come up before the juvenile court is ever held in a common prison, or do they always have detention homes for children?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would say that the answer there would be that there are not cases where they are held in the manner indicated, although there might be an occasion where there was no other means, for a very short period of time, to hold somebody in detention. They usually use the facilities of the children's aid society if there are not detention homes. A few municipalities have actual detention homes.

There is, of course, a very fine detention home attached to the new Metro Toronto juvenile family court.

Mr. Thompson: How many detention homes are there across the province?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There are not a great many. I know there is one in Ottawa. There are a few, but there is not a great number of them by any means.

As a matter of fact, that brings up another question that I do not wish to go into here now, the practicability of establishing a detention home to take care of one child perhaps in 18 months, or something of that sort.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Has the hon. member a question on vote 215?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Yes, Mr. Chairman, if I might.

Mr. Chairman: Proceed.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, with respect to item No. 11, grant to legal aid fund, might I ask the hon. Attorney-General if this is the entire amount of money which is spent to provide aid to those who are unable to pay for their own? Is that the purpose of this grant? If it is the purpose, is this the entire amount of money that is spent by the government to provide aid to this type of people?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: In addition to this figure, the government pays the cost of transcript and appeal to the court of appeal, and the outgoing expenses and out-of-pocket expenses of counsel in capital cases, through to the supreme court of Canada.

Also, the government pays the cost of preliminary inquiries, in all cases, of legal aid. The actual report on legal aid is made to the legal aid committee by the secretary of the law society, usually in April. I have here his statement with respect to the work of legal aid and legal aid clinics, something like 200 of them established throughout the province. Further, a great deal of time and work is contributed by lawyers throughout the whole province in this field.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Attorney-General satisfied then, that this is sufficient to insure that there is nobody in this province who lacks legal aid, due to the inability of that person to pay for it?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think I can say at this time, I am satisfied that the ends of justice are properly met—not just by our contribution but in the general set up of legal aid in the province. I must commend the voluntary work that is done by many men, including the barristers and solicitors throughout the province, in this respect. I am satisfied that the ends of justice are properly met by the present procedure. But by that, I do not ever want to indicate that it is perfect. We can always improve on these things, but I do not think anybody is suffering as a result of it.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, along the same lines, could I ask the hon. Attorney-General if he noticed the remarks of the sheriff for the county of York just a few days ago, when he said he was most concerned about the availability of lawyers to handle these legal aid matters? I also ask whether or not the hon. Attorney-General intends to do anything about this.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The answer is in the negative.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I usually depend on the reports that I get from the law society, and I will get one in April, no doubt.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask about item No. 13 in vote 215. This $10,000 for the police college. Did they find out where the college is going to be?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say that we gave consideration to this matter. The hon. leader of the Opposition wanted it, then the hon. member for Nipissing wanted it.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Why not Lindsay?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say this, sir, that we discussed that, and we did want to divert the Opposition so we thought we would have to find some new place for it.

Mr. Nixon: Why not Lindsay?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that might be a good place. We might think of that later.

Mr. Whicher: The question is, Mr. Chairman, does it cost $10,000 to find out? That is quite a lot of money.

Hon. Mr. Frost: One cannot tell, a lot of people—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I might say just on that point, that that was set up chiefly for research.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, with respect to vote 215, item No. 11—

Hon. Mr. Frost: How many times has this thing got to be carried?

Some Liberal hon. members: It was not carried.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Sopha: With respect to the operation of legal aid—and I am not going to go into any summary of how it operates—I would say to the hon. Attorney-General that, in major criminal cases and serious criminal cases, at least my experience has been that the operation has devolved down to the selection of the most junior member of the bar, in any particular county, who is assigned the duty of defending those accused of serious crime.

Now, we could not hope, Mr. Chairman, that each person accused of, say, murder, would have a defence counsel of the competence of the hon. Prime Minister, as he described his earlier career to us yesterday. I want to ask the hon. Attorney-General whether he has considered, or whether he has a committee considering, the adoption of the system which is very frequent in the United States, and that is to have a public defender in this province?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The answer is no.

Vote 215 agreed to.

On vote 216:

Some hon. members: No. No.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We cannot let the largest one in the lot go quickly.

I would like to indicate, by certain statistics the increase in the force and the effectiveness of the Ontario provincial police during the period I have had the honour to hold the office of Attorney-General. I am going to give hon. members the figures on July 31, 1955:

Police strength—1,414.

Number of mobile units, including motorcycles—553.

Number of radar sets—6.

At that time, commissioner McNeil commanded the force, but commissioner Clark is now in command, and he is with us here this afternoon.

Then there were progressive increases from 1955 to 1960 and, on February 29, 1960, the strength of the force was 1,855—which is an overall uniform strength of 441 more than was the case in 1955.

The number of motor units was 712, which is an increase of 159 over the 1955 figures.

And the number of radar sets was 26, which is an increase of 20 over the original figure for 1955.

There is presently a total of 76 government-owned Ontario provincial police buildings. This figure includes 9 district headquarters, the balance are detachment buildings.

In addition to the district headquarters and detachment buildings, there are presently 167 government-owned housing units occupied by personnel, on a rental basis, throughout the province, but mostly in northern Ontario.

During the year, new detachment buildings were completed at Whitby and Shabagua. Additional police office buildings are required at various other locations. Four housing units were erected at Espanola, but the policy of constructing houses for force personnel has been discontinued, except where there are very emergent situations in the north.

The report of the commissioner of the Ontario provincial police, for the year 1959, has been tabled in the House and is being printed. At the present time, this force patrols about 9,000 miles of King's highway and 65,000 miles of secondary county and townships roads.

The technique of selective enforcement has been employed in order to make the best possible use of available manpower. Selective enforcement is a basic tenet of professional traffic laws enforcement, that provides for a concentration of effort against accident-causing violations at locations, at times of highest collision frequency.

Of a total of 630 fatal accidents in 1959, on Ontario provincial police patrolled roads, 43 per cent. were brought about by excessive speed driving.

Almost one-third of all the fatal traffic accidents involved automobiles running off the highway, and drinking drivers were implicated in 26 per cent. of the cases.

Provincial police officers, in the prosecution of their traffic safety campaign in 1959, checked 669,000 motor vehicles, issued 293,000 warnings, and prosecuted 97,138 traffic charges. Fines imposed by court for motoring offences, and provincial police prosecutions during the 12-month period, totalled $1,426,000.

Several top level conferences of senior police and law enforcement officials were called, during the year 1959, in an effort to deal with the ever-increasing problem of traffic safety. One one occasion, Mr. Hudson R. Hamm, the director of field services, traffic institute, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, were brought in to meet with our 17 district sergeants at general headquarters for a week, during which time a study was made of different methods of traffic control.

As a result of this visit, we have among other things compiled a new highway traffic enforcement manual for the use of the Ontario provincial police officers. This is quite a manual, and is something that contains a great deal of information.

The hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) the other day was suggesting that things should be done to keep the force in front of the public a little more than it is, and I thought it was a good suggestion. But perhaps some of the public would be interested to know that this manual contains such good common sense as this excerpt taken from it:

Strive for uniform procedure within your department.

This is patrol for traffic law enforcement rules laid down or suggested.

It is important that you do not only use professionally recommended techniques, but also that your methods are similar to those of others in the department.

For this is to the police officer.

For example, don't be the only officer to use concealed patrol tactics. Uniform procedures help eliminate confusion and sometimes dissension among officers. In addition, the public learns what to expect from police, and tends to gain confidence in the department.

Now, this book is full of a lot of good sound suggestions to police officers of all ranks, and we feel that was a well worth contemplation following that conference.

Fifty-two municipalities were policed by the Ontario provincial police during 1959, under the provisions of section 51 of The Police Act. Five municipal contracts were terminated during the year, at Eganville, Regan, Matheson, Wainfleet township and Mersea township.

Mr. Chairman: Carried?

Some Liberal hon. members: No, Mr. Chairman, no.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the hon. Attorney-General could tell us how many members of the force leave each year—how many leave their employ?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I thought I made it fairly clear in generalities yesterday when I gave some percentages. However, the actual number this year of resignations for 1959 was 66. In a force of some 1,800, that is a satisfactory record.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Attorney-General give the reasons why these 5 municipalities terminated their contract with the Ontario provincial police?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, there has been a general practice of late to try to get more and more police officers on the roads for patrol work, on the roads patrolled by the police. With that policy predominant, and with the policy of Treasury which was inherited—and I guess still exists—we must include, in the number of Ontario provincial police that we are authorized to have—any of them who are out on municipal duty. So, in order to get the largest percentage possible of the force available for the very urgent duties that we found on our highways particularly, the trend was in that direction, and that is the reason for it.

Mr. Thomas: Well, Mr. Chairman, would it be true to say that the contract was terminated because of The Department of the Attorney-General, or because of the municipalities?

Hon. M. Frost: Oh, both of them. Numbers of municipalities have gone off that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I assume that these people do not have any—these Ontario provincial police—do not have any organization to represent them, and if I am wrong in that assumption—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, yes, they do. They have the Ontario provincial police association.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Then might I ask the number of hours which these people are required to work each week, and if they are entitled—as a result of having to attend in court—to time off to compensate for that?

Now, the reason I ask the question, Mr. Chairman, is that I have been advised that there have been instances where these people have not been able to get equal time off from their duties, as a result of being over-worked, and I understand that they must take it each year.

I would like to know from the hon. Attorney-General whether or not this situation has been corrected, and whether or not these policemen are assured of getting time off to compensate for additional duties in court and so on.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, yes, if they are working in court, at times other than their normal duty times, that would be the case. The accumulation of time or overtime can be taken by way of time off, and is expected to be taken as quickly as it can be taken, taking into account the pressing duties at the time.

They are trying to work out, in the Ontario provincial police, the overtime which had accumulated some years ago very seriously. But, with the larger number of men now on the force, there is a very pronounced decline in the curve, and I think I can say that the commissioner is satisfied that it is being worked out in a normal manner now.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I asked the number of hours which each man is required to work—what is the ordinary work week of these people?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: A 48-hour week.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if, in many of the municipalities throughout the province, they carry out their own vehicle inspection in their own city? I recognize the job that the hon. Attorney-General has done throughout the province, but apparently it has been a little bit spotty.

Does the hon. Attorney-General make any grant to the local municipalities for their inspection of the vehicles within their own limits? And does he recognize any of their inspections?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am not quite clear on that question; does the hon. member mean Ontario provincial police vehicles?

Mr. Innes: No, I mean the vehicles that are inspected in individual cities and by local police.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. Innes: The hon. Attorney-General has nothing to do with that, nor does he give any grant to carry out these inspections?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Of course, there is the $1 per capita grant, it is a very general grant to municipalities.

Mr. Innes: Yes, but that is strictly on their own.

There are many of the municipalities doing excellent work in this regard, and I just thought it would be worthy of the consideration of the hon. Attorney-General to promote that more, and to recognize some of their inspections, because they certainly do a good job. Does the hon. Attorney-General not feel that his inspection throughout the province is spotty to a great degree?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Mr. Innes: That is a standard answer over there today.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is a good answer when that is the fact.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if the $351,000 increase in the salary estimates for the next year indicates a salary increase for the provincial police?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, yes, definitely so. The provincial police have had the increase along with the rest of the service, and the normal increments, and the classifications have been established with the civil service commission, I would say, in conformity with the brief of the force. It is in the process of being adapted.

Mr. Gisborn: Another question, Mr. Chairman. There has been, from some areas in the province, a suggestion or request that the provincial police cruisers be converted to ambulances. Has any consideration been given to this?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, I would say quite emphatically that that is not a duty of a police officer on our highways, in my opinion at all. Further, it would simply detract from their duties and would be a step backwards.

In some municipalities in the United States, I think the fire departments have been called in to do that. But the policing of our highways is a big enough job by itself. I do not want to see the men on the force turned into ambulance people.

Mr. Gisborn: Not even in areas where hospitals would be a long distance away and the traffic was thin?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is not their duty. There are other people who have those duties.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Attorney-General answered the point, but I know he was not here to listen or hear those immortal words of mine last Monday night. But the city council and the chamber of commerce in North Bay have given a great deal of thought to this question. I think the hon. member for Wentworth East brought up a very good point.

Now, is it the hon. Attorney-General himself who decides that this proposal is useless, and that some police officers' vehicles should not be so equipped?

All we were asking was that certain vehicles carry a certain amount of this type of equipment, because we read almost every few months of people who die in accidents because ambulances are not available.

There have been instances in this province of several deaths because of that lack, and we believe, up in our area, that it would be a very, very good thing.

At some time, I hope that we can bring somebody down from the north who will debate with the hon. Attorney-General on the value of it.

Mr. Sopha: In the era of the 40-hour week, which is slowly but persistently decreasing to the 32-hour week, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General how persistent have been the demands of this Ontario provincial police association to reduce their work week from 48 hours to 40 hours?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The Ontario provincial police association, during my tenure of office at any rate, has been very co-operative, and at the present time I think I can say they are satisfied with the situation, as much as anybody can be satisfied, in the economy such as we have at the present time, which seems to constantly spiral up in cost.

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be put off with an answer like that.

I would like to hear from the hon. Attorney-General whether they have made that demand? How persistent has their demand been over the past few years to reduce the work week? I ask because 48 hours, in the same category of mathematics used by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), that seems to me to be a 6-day week of 8 hours a day. Now, I would like to hear whether they have persistently asked for a reduction—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No.

Mr. Sopha: —or whether they have ever asked for a reduction.

Mr. Bryden: Why does not the hon. Attorney-General reduce it without being asked?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General what responsibility if any, the Ontario provincial police takes with regard to the policing of the properties of the Niagara parks commission.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: None at all. None at all.

Mr. Bryden: Are there any other agencies of the government that operate their own police forces apart from the Niagara parks commission?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. Attorney-General believe that this sort of system, of one commission of the government having its own little empire, with its own police force makes for efficient and effective enforcement of law in the province?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes. As a matter of fact that is what the hon. member for Essex North asked two or three years ago, and I think I gave a full explanation at the time, and I think—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We will send the hon. member for Woodbine the Hansard and he can read it.

Mr. Bryden: Well, maybe the hon. Prime Minister can send me the Hansard, but regardless of that, I would suggest that it is—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The answer is simply this, that in the best interests of policing under the situation as it exists there, we consider it is better to be run that way.

Mr. MacDonald: Why?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Because it works out.

Mr. Bryden: I would suggest that the government might reconsider that decision, which does not make much—

Mr. MacDonald: Let me pursue this for a moment. When were the Niagara police force cut from being a part of, or being supervised by, the Ontario provincial police?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): The Niagara park has always had responsibility for what is known as Queen Victoria park and for the extension from Queen Victoria park, both north and south to Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and in the judgment of the Niagara parks commission, they felt that, when they were doing a part of it, they should really assume the responsibility for the whole park, and it works quite well.

Vote 216 agreed to.

On vote 217:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 217 has to do with the official guardian. Mr. MacLeane Baird, QC, retired as official guardian, and Mr. Fred T. Watson, former deputy, was promoted and appointed to fill this important office and he is here today.

The official guardian represents all children under 21 years of age in matters in the supreme court of Ontario, county courts, surrogate courts, and The Devolution of Estates Act, in connection with matters in which the children are entitled to share in an estate or action.

In addition, the official guardian acts guardian ad litem in The Highway Traffic Act, where a minor is being sued under this Act. He also has duties to perform under The Matrimonial Causes Act in various court rules.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Attorney-General explain why the salaries have gone down from $23,000 in the official guardian's department, as compared with last year?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There were two retirements in quick order there. There was Mr. Wilson, who had occupied the position for many years, and within a year after that Mr. Baird, who had been promoted from deputy. The adjustment of salaries in the promotion of people in the other departments had that end result.

Mr. Singer: Is not the work of the department increasing. Have those people been replaced on the junior level?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, they have been replaced—

Mr. Singer: Two for one.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question in connection with special services for the children's aid society. Can the hon. Attorney-General clarify what those special services are?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Under The Matrimonial Causes Act, certain investigations have to be made by the official guardian, where he is in the picture, in those unfortunate situations of family break-up and that sort of thing. They use the services, generally speaking, of the children's aid society.

They used to use the services of the probation officer, and that was one of the readjustments of duties of officers that I mentioned earlier. The probation officers have been withdrawn from that field.

But the children's aid society officials are used, and a fee is paid to the children's aid society for that work, and it is recovered through the actual charge which was raised a year ago for the issue of the writ in this sort of action.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get some clarification about the responsibility that a children's aid society has to the Legislature. It seems to me that there is public money paid to a number of children's aid societies across this province, there is money that is raised by community chests and other groups. If public money is given to children's aid societies, do all the children's aid societies report and bring their annual reports to the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Dovercourt will have to ask the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) in due course about that, because it is under his department that the main work of children's aid societies are carried out.

Vote 217 agreed to.

On vote 218:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 218, the public trustee. Mr. J. W. G. Thompson, who is the public trustee, is also here.

The public trustee occupies a unique position in that he is a corporation solo, and I suppose that brings him up in some respects to the same kind of organization as some of the ecclesiastical corporation souls, although I do not know that he is always quite in that degree.

Mr. Nixon: I heard that he is soulless.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: He administers the estates of patients in Ontario Hospitals, pursuant to the provisions of The Mental Hospitals Act, and pursuant to the provisions of The Crown Administration of Estates Act.

He administers the estates of persons who die in Ontario intestate and without adult next-of-kin in the province. Total assets under administration amount to about $47 million.

Under The Charity Accounting Act, he also has the supervision of charitable funds and, pursuant to The Crown Administration of Estates Act, he takes control of property which has been forfeited to the Crown.

Additional duties are performed by virtue of some 15 other statutes.

He has a staff of 132, including 12 solicitors who are in charge of the administration of various estates, and look after litigation in connection with those estates, as well as legal matters arising in the administration of them.

Vote 218 agreed to.

On vote 219:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Vote 219 concerns the accountant of the supreme court.

The assets are about $32 million and there are liabilities of approximately $28.5 million—there is a good Scotsman in charge—I would like to see him here, Mr. J. B. Cameron—and there are reserves of $3.5 million. The case transactions, both in and out of the office of the supreme court accountant, average about $1 million a month. This office is well administered, having as I say a good Scotsman as accountant of the supreme court.

Now, in relation to this vote, and to some extent in relation to the previous ones, I would like to make this comment.

In the offices of the public trustee and the supreme court of Ontario, there are two advisory committees, which have been making very careful studies with respect to the investment of funds, and with respect to the interest to be paid.

Mr. George Gathercole, the Deputy Minister of The Department of Economics, is chairman of the advisory committee. I have very recently received from him a report with schedules indicating very close affiliation, by the committee, of the work of these two officers in the finances. It is a very complete report.

Bill No. 18, An Act to amend The Judicature Act and Bill No. 24, An Act to amend The Public Trustee Act, presently before the Legislature, reflect some of the recommendations of the committee with respect to the investments.

Mr. Gould: With respect to this item, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General if, when an estate account is closed out, a person who is concerned about that estate is entitled to receive, as of right from the accountant's department, a statement of accounting, or must we request and pay for same?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If an official certificate is required, there is a charge for it. But there is what Mr. Cameron tells me is an unofficial certificate, an informal certificate.

Mr. Gould: Well, then, is there a tariff provided in relation to the charges?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It depends on the size of the estate. He assures me the official one is in the tariff.

Vote 219 agreed to.

On vote 220:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, this is the final vote, and it is on a new office, the co-ordinator of justice administration, Mr. L. Russell.

This office provides administrative assistance for the county court judiciary by compiling statistical data and reports on the work of the courts.

The state of the county and district and division court lists are prepared and forwarded monthly to the Attorney-General, and to the senior judge in each district for such action as is deemed necessary. Relief is worked out to cover such situations as illness, overload, special cases and vacation, which actually extends to judges and magistrates.

The adequacy of courtroom accommodation, improvement of courthouses, staff, court reporters, business methods in our offices and like problems are also the concern of this office.

I am glad to be able to say that the coordinator reports to me, as of this date, that the overall picture of the state of the county and district court lists are satisfactory, and that, where the parties and their solicitors are desirous of having their cases heard, they can be placed on a trial list and be disposed of without undue delay.

There are, however, some definite physical difficulties in the supreme, county and magistrates' courts in the county of York, due to the lack of adequate courtroom accommodation. It has recently been announced that there is going to be a further delay of one year in acquiring the University Avenue Armoury site for the new county of York and Metro courthouse.

I do sincerely regret this, and I would like to urge both the federal Department of Defence and the Metro Toronto authorities to bestir themselves, even more than they have ever yet disturbed themselves, in the interests of the administration of justice, by finding a solution, so that the building project will start as presently scheduled.

The plans for the proposed new courthouse provide for 3 county courtrooms for jury trials; 5 county courtrooms for non-jury trials; and 6 county court judges' chambers, as well as 3 supreme courtrooms, jury; and 7 supreme courtrooms, non-jury.

When this is accomplished there will be more than double the present accommodation for these courts.

Furthermore, when the presently used courtrooms in the city hall are vacated, there will be adequate accommodation for the magistrates' courts, if they take over the vacated accommodation.

Any hon. member familiar with the conditions as they now exist in the Toronto city hall will agree with me that there is a real urgency for completion of these projects, and I would certainly like to motivate the sense of urgency in the most responsible department to get on with the job.

In the county court of the county of York, there is approximately a 12-week waiting period from filing of the notice of trial to the actual trial date.

I come to the magistrates' courts in more detail. Statistics are maintained showing, in various categories, the case loads in magistrates' courts. Problems dealing with these courts such as staff, salaries, relief for holidays, illness, volume, hearing of special cases, and the adequacy of courtroom accommodation are handled here.

Outside of the metropolitan area of Toronto, which I will deal with separately, I feel I can safely say that the case load of the magistrates is adequately handled. But, with the growth in many centres, consideration must constantly be given to additional needs and personnel.

Magistrates in Ontario today are regularly sitting in no less than 205 different courtrooms around the province, and in this latest report only 6 of them are classified as poor or very poor.

There are at present 65 magistrates, 12 deputy magistrates, and 8 part-time magistrates in this province, of which 19 are in the Toronto metropolitan area. That means there are some 85 magistrates doing this work throughout the province, including the deputies, and approximately 75 Crown attorneys.

Detailed records have been kept of all case loads in the province of Ontario, outside of the metropolitan area of Toronto, for the first 6 months of 1959. I would just like to give hon. members these case loads. These are for the first 6 months of 1959:

Traffic, 159,090; liquor, 29,813; code, that is the federal statute, 29,847; and others, 120,524.

This is a total of 339,274 for the half-year, and on the basis of a full year would be about 650,000.

Out of all that amount, nearly 600,000 of the 650,000 would be in relation to statutory offences within the province. The code would account for a relatively small percentage.

In the metropolitan area of Toronto for the full year of 1959, using the same headings:

Traffic, 270,655; liquor, 21,649; code, 28,053; and others, 10,463—for a total of 330,830.

It will be observed that, if the figures for the province other than the metropolitan area of Toronto are projected to a full year, approximately one-third of the total charges for the province originate in the Toronto metropolitan area.

The numerical comparison of magistrates within and without Metro, at first glance, might indicate some disproportion in the allotments. But the compactness of the Metro area, as compared with the great distances in many other parts of the province and a number of other factors, offset this to a considerable extent.

In Metropolitan Toronto there are 15 magistrates' courtrooms, as well as 3 auxiliary courtrooms. Under the senior magistrate, work is allocated in what he considers to be the best way for dispatching the volume of work.

One should bear in mind also that in the Metro area there is a large separate family and juvenile court made up of 5 judges and considerable other personnel, including an administrator; 3 departments—the department of administration, of social service, and clinics—and an adequate detention and observation home.

I come, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion on this vote, to what I think will also be an important procedural matter for the future, which will provide a good deal of detailed information to the central co-ordinator's office, while such information is still sufficiently current to enable the necessary action to be taken thereon. It will be broad enough to cover all the courts.

Officials in our offices throughout the province will submit reports on forms either developed, or to be developed, showing the exact state of the court lists, dockets, delays and other pertinent information at all levels, supreme court, county court, division court and civil and criminal and magistrates' courts.

These will be analyzed and, when unnecessary delays are noted, the reason will be determined as to whether the delay be caused by our official or a member of the profession, and the necessary remedial action will be taken.

I conclude my remarks by giving to the House—because there has been some criticism made about a single incident—I have a synopsis which I received in the last few days of all persons in any of our county jails, or institutions of that sort, who are in custody for more than 30 days awaiting trial.

I am just going to put this on the record:

In Algoma, none.

In Carleton, 1 charged with forgery. The next court of competent jurisdiction will be April 4.

In Cochrane, none.

In Elgin, none.

In Essex, 3 breaking and entry, 1 unlawful possession, 1 attempted rape, and 1 robbery. They are all committed for trial and should be disposed of early in April.

In Frontenac, none.

In Haldimand, none.

In Hastings, none.

In Lambton, none.

In Lennox and Addington, none.

In Lincoln, none.

In Middlesex, 1 for criminal negligence. The expression here is "hung jury." I take it that must mean another trial coming up. Two breaking and entering, one uttering. All have been committed and will be tried at the spring assize.

In Nipissing, 1 charge of possession.

In Northumberland and Durham, 1 on murder to be heard April 4, adjourned from January 18 at the request of defence counsel.

In Oxford, none.

In Parry Sound, none.

In Peterborough, 1 on theft, 2 for breaking and entering, and 1 for possession of a shotgun. All committed for trial and will be dealt with no later than April 1.

Prescott and Russell, none.

Prince Edward, none.

Simcoe, none.

Stormont-Dundas-Glenarry, 1 for robbery, 1 breaking and entering, and 1 for theft.

Dundas and Glenarry, 1 for robbery, 1 for breaking and entering, 1 for theft. All committed for trial. Trials will be disposed of March 14 in all cases.

Sudbury, none.

Timiskaming, none.

Victoria, none.

Kenora, 1 person being held for murder.

Welland, none.

Wentworth, none.

York, now there is quite a number here in York, 38 in all: 2 for conspiracy and traffic in drugs, 1 for conspiracy to traffic in drugs, 1 traffic and drugs, 2 having drugs, 2 defrauds, 3 for rape, 6 for breaking and entering, 1 having drugs, 1 received, 4 for auto theft, 1 for abduction, 1 for conspiracy, 1 for assault with intent to steal, 1 for manslaughter, 1 for wounding, 4 for robbery, 1 for forgery, 3 for fraud, 1 for assault occasioning bodily harm, and 1 that I could not understand, 30 days but an inmate of a bawdy house, and actually I find on inquiry that that particular person is serving a 6-month sentence for another offence, and that accounts for the 30-day deal.

Now, the total here is that 7 of these 38 are serving other sentences, 2 are remanded for sentence, and 6 have trial dates within the next week.

This, Mr. Chairman, gives me a total of 61 held in custody for more than 30 days awaiting trial, as reported from all counties and districts in Ontario. And that is the position at this moment.

I noticed the report that I did not get into from Renfrew that is on the bottom here.

An hon. member: Rape?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I do not know, it says 1 for rape, 1 for murder, and 1 for intended to move. That is the state of affairs of the province in that particular case.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General a question? Because of the question having risen as to the case load, and because of the long waiting list in the processing of cases, does the hon. Attorney-General plan on establishing any night courts in the province in the traffic—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: For traffic?

Mr. Newman: Any type of night court.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, traffic. There are a number of night courts for traffic in the province. I do not have the exact number here, but actually there are quite a few traffic courts throughout this province at the present time, and they are set up usually to meet the convenience of the people in the locality who show a sufficient desire for them, and indicate that through the local authority.

Mr. Newman: Thank you.

Vote 220 agreed to.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention something which I think is omitted in this particular department. We have many people going through court, and I do not think we really have done a great deal of social research into the causes for this—what kind of people they are, what kinds of crime are being committed and so forth.

I know, for example, that a couple of years ago, there was an unfortunate remark made, I believe by the former Attorney-General who did not have the facts in connection with the paternal background of people who were committing offences.

I think that we should research in the same way as, for example, the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) is looking at the cause of accidents. It would be very helpful if we looked at the social reasons why people are committing crime, because when we understand those reasons, I think we could deal more effectively with the situation of crime.

Mr. Gould: I do not recollect the hon. Attorney-General giving us any figures as to appeals from convictions in Ontario courts, and how successful they were, by which we can find out how our magistrates are doing their work in convictions.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There were 721 appeals before the appeal court of Ontario, argued before the appeal court of Ontario, 721 of them in the last 5 years.

There has been a complaint in only one, and that complaint was raised in this House the other day. In that particular situation, as far as I have been able to ascertain, the counsel for the accused made no efforts whatever to urge upon the court reporters—and I am not saying that is an excuse for the court reporter—to produce the evidence any earlier than it was. But when the case was drawn to my attention, I promised the hon. member for Bracondale that I would do my best to get it down for hearing. It was on for hearing yesterday, it was argued yesterday morning and the appeal was dismissed.

Mr. Gould: Mr. Chairman, the question I asked was how many appeals were lodged in the court of appeals from conviction by magistrates in Ontario during the past year, and how many convictions were squashed as a result thereof?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would have to get that information.

Vote 417 agreed to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Just a moment, excuse me, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member wants to ask a question.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question with regard to the teachers' superannuation fund, it comes under this particular vote.

Mr. Chairman: Yes?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): May I ask if that question may not be better asked on the main estimates when we come to The Department of Education, where the contribution of some $13 million is listed?

Actually, there is not much use asking these questions now, and asking them all over again on that estimate.

Mr. Troy: Well, I was not going to ask it twice. Thank you.

Vote 417 agreed to.

Vote 515 agreed to.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF PARKS

Hon. W. M. Nickle moves second reading of Bill No. 89, "An Act to provide for financial assistance to municipalities in the establishment of parks."

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this bill seems rather unusual to me, in that it establishes a brand new principle.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): We are always establishing brand new principles.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I know, I know this government is always establishing new principles. The principle is a good one but, Mr. Speaker, the way this is being established is unusual.

As hon. members are aware, there is a section in The Planning Act which deals with what are commonly referred to as 5 per cent. lands. These things concern municipalities to a very substantial extent.

I would expect that, at a later time in the proceedings of this House, Mr. Speaker, there will be amendments to The Planning Act in keeping with the previous pronouncements of the hon. Prime Minister. At that time, we can probably talk about the 5 per cent. section and so on.

However, it seems sensible to the government to move the community planning branch from The Department of Planning and Development to The Department of Municipal Affairs. This decision, I think, is logical and sensible, and rises sort of automatically from the recommendations of the Gordon committee report.

But now, Mr. Speaker, we are establishing something new and different, and again getting at the municipal field and the municipal responsibility of parks. The grants that are referred to here go to municipalities and, on the one hand, where we are taking away, from The Department of Planning and Development, the whole responsibility for community planning in the dealing of 5 per cent. lands and the dealing with funds in lieu of 5 per cent. lands, at this point, we are putting something back into The Department of Planning and Development, and again establishing the same sort of interference with the conduct of municipalities that the Gordon committee recommended should be done away with.

In other words, on one hand we are making progress, and on the other hand we are moving backwards.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this makes no sense to me. The principle in this bill seems logical and sensible, that the province should give help to municipalities who want to establish parks. There is a reference to the matter here in the estimates, and I will deal with it when the particular estimate comes up. But apparently these are called camping parks.

The way the Act reads, there does not seem to be any particular reference to camping parks. It seemed to me these are municipal parks as such, and the municipal parks are going to be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council.

There is another point in principle involved here, Mr. Speaker, as well. In order to enable municipalities to take proper advantage of the principle of this scheme, I would think that there should be much more spelling out of the basis on which the advances are going to be made.

I notice there is forecast in the estimates the sum of some $500,000 that is going to be devoted to this purpose. That will allow about 10 parks for the whole of the province on this basis, presuming that each one of the 10 municipalities are going to get the full advantage of the grant.

But, Mr. Speaker, those are some of the details that lie in the bill, and I think those should be spelled out.

The main point that I am making is that, on the one hand, the government is paying attention to the recommendation of the Gordon committee in their report, and taking the planning and development section out of The Department of Planning and Development and moving it over to The Department of Municipal Affairs. And that is in my opinion a good move.

In this bill they are now giving something back to The Department of Planning and Development which is going to deal again with municipalities and cause, and continue or perpetuate the same sort of confusion that has existed up to the present time.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this bill should affix the responsibility for these park donations within The Department of Municipal Affairs, and not within The Department of Planning and Development, because we are just going to repeat the same sort of error that has existed here before. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the way this bill is set up.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I just clarify my hon. friend's thinking, perhaps I will be able to do that.

I would say that, first of all, the planning department as such is taken from The Department of Planning and Development.

As a matter of fact, in going back into the history of that department to its beginning, it was never intended actually that that department would assume the proportions that it did assume, with relation to community planning.

It was natural that it should go to The Department of Municipal Affairs, and I can say that it would have gone to Municipal Affairs, despite anything the Gordon report would have said. It was intended that should be the case.

As a matter of fact, when The Department of Planning and Development was first set up about 16 years ago, at that time, the department approved of only a very small number of plans every year. Because of the great growth of this province, induced by the prosperity brought about by this government, the province has extended greatly, with the result that the matter of community planning assumed proportions that were never expected 16 years ago.

Now, sir, I suggest we leave that out of the question. Here is the point.

The Department of Planning and Development is to be given the matter of planning the overall provincial parks. They are, of course, in many cases, municipal in their implication, but, as a matter of fact, they are province-wide in their effects, and it is the proper place to have them.

For instance, the St. Lawrence parks, of course, do affect municipalities down there very much. On the other hand, that is a matter of great broad provincial planning as are Algonquin park and Quetico park, and the Pinery down on Lake Huron, and Presqu'île and Rondeau parks and others.

Now, actually speaking, of course, some of those parks really come, for administrative purposes, under The Department of Lands and Forests, and I think it would be a great mistake to remove them from there.

On the other hand, in the matter of the provincial parks generally, it would seem to us that the planning of those parks would be with The Department of Planning and Development.

Now, there should not be any misunderstanding about this Act. This Act is an Act which is in the explanatory note at the commencement. This bill provides for financial assistance to municipalities in establishing parks to be maintained and operated, for the use and enjoyment of the public, in such manner as will be complementary to the use and enjoyment of provincial parks.

Now, the need to be met, sir, is this. I think last year we had between 5 million and 6 million visitors to our provincial parks, such as Algonquin park, the Niagara parks—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That does not include the Niagara parks, which had 8 million visitors alone. It would include the Quetico, Algonquin, Rondeau, Presqu'île and these other parks.

Now, the point is this, we have found a very definite need for the type of park that is complementary to that park, the type which can be municipally administered, and that is the purpose of this.

I would very much doubt that this Act would, in itself, be of use for instance to an urban municipality. But an urban municipality is not excluded. It might be. But it would seem to us here, that this would apply largely, for instance, to county parks.

Now, I know of one county that is desirous of obtaining certain lakefront in their area, very beautiful lakefront, and this gives them up to 50 per cent. of the cost, and 50 per cent of the cost of the buildings, provided they run it in a manner that is complementary to our parks system. That is the purpose of this Act.

Now, I would say this, that there are controls here to assure that these parks are really complementary to the parks, to the general parks system. As a matter of fact, we would not want two of these parks alongside each other. Actually there has to be planning on, you might say, a municipal basis, but also on a province-wide basis.

Now, there are a surprising number of municipalities that have raised this point. As a matter of fact, the Jackson's Point park which is now a provincial park, was acquired by the county of York. It was taken over by the province by the implications of the metropolitan deal. I would say that would be a very natural park to come under this bill.

Now that, sir, is the purpose, and I would say this, that the planning itself is to be on the province-wide basis to meet the needs of our population in that sense, and that is the purpose of being with The Department of Planning and Development.

Now I will speak further about the real purposes of The Department of Planning and Development in days to come. I think that removal of the community planning from that department really brings the department back to the real purposes of the original department.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister permit one or two questions?

The Act, in its description, refers to financial assistance to municipalities. Now, I gather from the explanation that has been made that is not an exact description of the purpose. Actually this is to be complementary, if you will, to the province's parks systems.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Section 2 specifically suggests that.

Well now, Mr. Speaker, I was of the opinion, when I first looked at the Act, that this was intended to be of assistance to municipalities as such, to assist them in developing in their own parks, within their own communities, all of which is a very commendable thing.

I gather now that it is not the case. Most of these parks will be parks outside in the urban areas, if you would.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would think mainly, but not necessarily.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, what about the normal municipality of 25,000 or 30,000 people?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the point is this. These parks are self-supporting. I think it is very apparent that, in a small park where a charge is made, it probably is not self-supporting, and therefore I do not think that the municipalities would be attracted to that. I think the municipalities would be attracted to the type of park where they could maintain bathing, camping, cooking and other facilities on a paying basis. No municipality wants to acquire something that is going to cost the taxpayers a lot of money, or in fact, money.

The purpose of this is to help the municipalities where they want to acquire a park that is operated on a user-basis—that is, operated on a basis which would enable the park to be self-supporting. Of course, if they want to go ahead and do something which is not self-supporting, it would be subject to controls. As hon. members know, there are controls in the bill there that specify that it pass, I think, the parks integration board, which is operated in a way with which the hon. members are familiar.

In any event, the parks integration board will hereafter operate from The Department of Planning and Development.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, would this Act permit the type of park I have in mind? We have, in my home city, tourist spots where strictly tourists from southern Ontario or the United States come and spend a few days or a week—would it permit that sort of park?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it could, subject to the matter being approved by the parks integration board, yes. It does not assist in the maintenance of it, it is just the acquiring of the park and the capital outlay.

Mr. Troy: In my home city they were confused when the announcement was made because right away the very active parks commission wanted to get some money to build an athletic park.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That comes under the community hall.

Mr. Troy: Yes, I know, sir, I found that out, but I wonder about the tourist camps.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, before we finish with this particular bill, I might say that this is the type of legislation which has worried me for a number of years. I know it is accepted in education and in many other fields.

I feel that once again we are coming into something which is going to cost the province quite a bit of money. Nobody seems to worry about the money being spent. All we worry about is the services we can give, regardless of the cost of those services rendered.

This is one thing that has bothered me about the government we have at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Good government.

Mr. Chapple: I feel that what I have just said is one problem with the government that is such a good government, and which does take all the credit for what we are getting. Although I feel it is doing a good job along those lines, yet it is tremendously costly, in my opinion at least.

It is possibly the most costly type of operation that anyone could conceivably have.

In this particular instance, we are setting up another umbrella where up to $50,000 can be spent. The minute one sets a limit of say $50,000, or any amount, for any organization to spend, then we get the costs of operation on the initial operation increased.

In other words, if one is buying a piece of land the municipality says: "Now, this piece of land is going to cost us $25,000." Immediately they say, well, first it is going to sell the land and the price is going to go up, if there is plenty of money there, the price will be voted up to the greatest possible extent and therefore—there being no control on the initial basis of this—we have, on the municipal level of government, the highest possible cost that we can get, although we do get the service.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): It has to be approved.

Mr. Chapple: Of course, it has to be approved, but generally approved at the highest possible level, whereas if we had some definite, real control on money that is being spent out and also a suggested control—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member may move the adjournment of this debate if he wants to. It can stand over to another day.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in adjourning the House I would like to make this motion. It is prompted and caused by pressing urgent necessity.

I move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that, notwithstanding the previous order, when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it will stand adjourned until 11 o'clock in the forenoon of Thursday next, and it will adjourn for luncheon interval at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and resume at 2 o'clock to sit until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The reasons for that, I think, are very apparent.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, Mr. Speaker, concerning the work on Thursday, I had said to the House that the next order would be The Department of Energy Resources, but the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is in Elliot Lake, and I would not want to make a commitment that we would go ahead with his estimates on Thursday.

Therefore, I would like to substitute for that The Department of Labour on Thursday, and The Department of Reform Institutions on Friday.

Sir, if it seems possible to do it, I could discuss with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) the matter of substituting The Department of Energy Resources for one of those orders that I have mentioned.

In any event, at the moment it will be The Department of Labour and The Department of Reform Institutions, and if there is a change I will discuss it with the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), so that the hon. members opposite would have due notice of any change.

Now, sir, if those items are completed on either of those days, then we could proceed with items on the order paper and the budget debate.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put to adjourn, may I ask why the committee on commissions will not sit tomorrow? This is the second week in a row.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is because of the change that was made in the order of the sittings of the House today.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, well, this is the second week that that particular committee is not sitting.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, I can answer that question. It is difficult to find a time that is mutually convenient for the committee, having in mind the other committee meetings, and for Judge Robb. We have set a meeting for 9 o'clock, Friday morning. That was the earliest that we could set it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the problem here is simply this, that it does seem to us unusual that the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Collings), who was in the middle of his explanation when the committee last adjourned, has seemed available. He has been here constantly, and yet we have had these two adjournments.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He is all through.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, definitely not. As the meeting adjourned two weeks ago, I had just posed a question to the hon. member, and the bell started to ring as the House was going in that afternoon at 2 p.m., and the chairman of the committee will agree with me. He did not answer the question, and that is the last we have seen of the hon. liquor commissioner.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I guess the liquor commissioner was saved by the bell then, is that right?

Mr. Singer: He has had a chance to recover, Mr. Speaker, and gird up his loins, and we would like to see him back again.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, is the committee on Lands and Forests cancelled for Thursday then?

Clerk of the House: No. It will be sitting at 9 o'clock, according to the orders.

Mr. Gisborn: I see that the labour committee sits at 10 o'clock, Mr. Speaker. It is not going to leave much time to get into the sections of the bill that are going to be quite contentious. I would suggest that the hon. Prime Minister take a look at the orders on committees for Thursday morning.

Mr. Wintermeyer: How about a 40-hour week?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are on a 48-hour week. That is the only answer to it.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.15 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1960

11 O'CLOCK A.M.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. W. G. Noden, from the standing committee on lands and forests, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act, 1952.

An Act to amend The Lakes and Rivers Improvement Act.

An Act to provide for the harvesting of wild rice.

An Act to amend The Forestry Act, 1952.

An Act to amend The Surveys Act, 1958.

An Act to amend The Trees Act.

An Act respecting Presqu'île provincial park.

An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act, 1958.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

An Act to amend The Public Lands Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree, from the standing committee on labour, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act.

An Act to amend The Boilers and Pressure Vessels Act, 1951.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. M. B. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Health Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are 4 sections to this amendment.

The first is to help regulate the indiscriminate and, at present, unregulated citing and operation of many refuse disposal areas, which have created serious problems in sanitation for local medical officers of health.

The second is to strengthen and clarify the health unit programme; there is no change in principle, it is a tidying up subsection.

The third is to make applicable sanitary by-laws, now in operation in organized territories, to those territories in Ontario which are not organized.

The fourth is to facilitate the transfer of matters relating to plumbing from The Department of Health to the Ontario water resources commission, under whose supervision these things now come.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. Report of the Minister of Education for the calendar year 1959.

2. Report of the workmen's compensation board of Ontario for the year 1959.

Mr. Speaker: We will revert to reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. R. K. McNeil, from the standing committee on agriculture, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act to amend The Warble Fly Control Act, 1952.

The Weed Control Act, 1960.

An Act to provide for the disposal of dead animals.

An Act to amend The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills received third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. Pr17, An Act respecting the board of education for the township of Etobicoke.

Bill No. Pr24, An Act respecting the city of Kingston.

Bill No. Pr28, An Act respecting the Blind River-Elliot Lake high school district board.

Hon. L. M. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

On vote 901:

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, in presenting these estimates for the current year I would draw to the attention of the House that this is the seventeenth time that I have presented the estimates of The Department of Labour.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Long may he reign.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I know quite well that, while to me 17 years seems quite a long time to sit in this House, the hon. member for Brant would consider that just a brief period.

When I presented the estimates in 1944, the total expenditures of the department for the ensuing fiscal year 1944-1945 was figured at $437,000. The estimates for 1960-1961 stand at $3.1 million.

It is a long way from those early days, and the growth of the province is reflected in the increase in the cost of administering The Department of Labour. The estimates of The Department of Labour are up $254,000 over the last fiscal year.

I think that this increase is due, in the main, to the fact that the province continues to go through a period of industrial and business expansion. This has meant that the department has had to expand services and take on more staff.

Apart from the salaries for new staff, the items covering travelling expenses, equipment and salary reflect our expanded operations.

One of the main items which shows an increase is that for the training of apprentices. This has gone from $450,000 to $480,000 for this year. This, of course, is shared by the federal government who take, well, a great interest in the development of apprenticeship training in this country.

Mr. Nixon: This is our share, is it not, this $480,000?

Hon. Mr. Daley: It is on a 50-50 basis, and so the total amount would be $960,000 expended on that activity within the province.

This type of expenditure however, is all to the good, in my opinion, because of the fact that it represents an outlet for which a substantial return is gained, namely, skilled mechanics in various trades.

I might say that here in Ontario a system of apprentice training has been developed which, for a long period of time, was unique. Back in 1928, a group of trade union and employer representatives approached the then Prime Minister, hon. G. Howard Ferguson, and asked for legislation on apprenticeship. This legislation was passed and came into force on January 1, 1929.

A provincial advisory committee was set up under the legislation to advise the Minister and the apprenticeship branch on problems relating to this type of training. And it is interesting to note that, in 1960, the same chairman is still at the head of the committee—Mr. Joseph M. Pigott of Hamilton.

I would like to draw that to the attention of the House. Here is the head of one of the big construction firms in the province, which would indicate that he is a very, very busy man, and yet he finds time, month after month, to come and interest himself and act as chairman of this advisory committee, to develop and continue to develop tradesmen from our own Canadian citizens. I think it is a great work, and I think he and several other members of that committee—who are still on it from the original term—deserve a great deal of credit, and the thanks of the people of this province for the work they do in that regard.

Apprenticeship in Ontario is largely confined to the construction and automotive trades, barbering and hairdressing, which are designated trades under this legislation. I personally have taken a great interest in this development. I think that it is one of the things essential, and of the greatest necessity, that opportunity be given to the type of boy who can acquire a reasonable amount of education, but for various reasons does not have the opportunity to go to university and into the professions, and that he be encouraged to take up a trade.

The trades today are entirely different than they were many years ago. Many years ago in the construction trade, it was deemed that they would only work a few months a year. Winter weather and everything stopped the building. But today that is entirely different. While they have not acquired the ability to guarantee full annual employment yet, the trades are much more satisfactory to work at, and they do provide a good type of living.

When we look back from my point of view, the contractors of today were the tradesmen of yesterday. It is a valuable thing to be a skilled mechanic, even though for some reason, a person does not use it. Yet it is very easy to carry the skills with him, and I suggest that the young men of this province can consider, when they are leaving school, the advisability of taking up a trade. There will be some handicap for the early period, because the wages will not meet those that they might acquire in industry, but they will be developing something and they will be very happy, I am sure, in years to come.

This apprenticeship training has been successful in the past, and I look forward to it playing a most important role in the education of these young people who are interested in becoming tradesmen.

A perusal of our estimates will reveal that there has been no spectacular fluctuation in our activities, but rather steady growth. I do not propose to say any more at this time. I will let the estimates speak for themselves. I have my assistants here who will assist me in answering any questions that hon. members might wish to have answered. I can say that the estimates have been carefully perused by The Provincial Treasurer's Department and I submit them for the consideration of the House.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to make a few introductory remarks before we begin the analysis of the detailed items.

At the outset I would commend the hon. Minister of Labour for his remarks, and for the long term he has served in this very important post—a post, Mr. Chairman, that personally I think has been important in the past, and is going to become increasingly more important in the future.

I have taken the opportunity on several occasions to speak generally of the problem that confronts our economic-social society here, and likewise that of all the free world in the next few years.

One of the challenges that we have is to help to settle, and show the road for settlement which has to be pursued in management-labour relations.

Mr. Chairman I have talked very generally and maybe even philosophically in conjunction with this problem. Let me just repeat in some respects some of the things that I have said.

It does seem to me that, at the present time, this House and the department have an opportunity that I am afraid we are not using to the best advantage. I think the problem that we are presented with at the present time is to preserve the dignity of the individual, and his free right to develop his personality in an ever-more complicated world.

Now we have been talking about unions, we have been talking about labour legislation. Let us talk for a little while about something that is broader and more significant, and that is the order of our social-economic system over the course of the next few years.

I am inclined to think it is going to be challenged as it has never been challenged before. It is going to be challenged by state control which we despise, and yet we have to meet it. Unless we can bring management and labour together as co-operative partners, we will have failed our day. To do that is our real responsibility.

I am not saying that any man knows the answer, but I am saying that we have the responsibility to try to find the general path that we should pursue to reach the right goal.

In that connection I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that firstly, for a long time, we have talked about unemployment, and there are those who say that one is a gloom-monger when one refers to unemployment. We can divide the unemployment that we have into what might be termed seasonal unemployment, chronic unemployment, technological unemployment, and unemployment that is the result of the dislocation of industry and technological changes.

It does seem to me that we have never tackled this problem effectively. For years and years we have had steady seasonal unemployment. That is something, Mr. Chairman, that we are met with year in and year out. We should have a plan to take care of this.

We have talked about technological unemployment. We have the dramatic illustration of Elliot Lake. That type of thing is going to happen again and again unless we are prepared to deal with such crises, and the biggest criticism that can be levied at this government is that we were not prepared to meet that particular crisis when it arose.

Now, I advise this House that similar crises are going to arise as a result of automation and technological change, just as sure as 1 and 1 are 2, in the course of the next few years. I say to hon. members that, unless we have a plan, unless we think about this matter now, we will be as bankrupt of probable solutions as we are in respect to the Elliot Lake situation today.

Therefore, I would say that it behooves the department at this time to call a high level conference, a conference that will bring into focus, and will bring together men knowledgeable in the technological field, knowledgeable in this problem of automation, men who can begin to work out a solution for the social catastrophe that is bound to occur and bound to hurt many people in the future.

Here is an area that we must do something about, Mr. Chairman—we have to do something about minimum wage. The hon. Minister a year ago said that this was a matter of serious consequence, and that the government was thinking about it. But I think there has been little suggestion or thought given to it in the interval.

We have to do something about portable pensions other than give the subject mere lip-service. The time, in my opinion, is here when we have to acknowledge almost the right, if you will, of an individual to a pension after a specific period of time. Maybe that period of time is 15 years. I do not know what it is. But after 15 years of employment, a man certainly, in this society today, should be in the position to say "I have earned something," and I think legislation should give him the protection that he needs to assure that he will be given a pension at the expiration of that specific period.

Now these problems, Mr. Chairman, might be theoretical. They might be philosophical in nature. But I say that, unless we take the opportunity to think and plan now, we will have failed in our basic purpose, and I would draw these things again, in summary, to the hon. members' attention.

Firstly, I refer to our responsibility to think about employment, but not in the manner that some would say of gloom-mongers. I am not one of those. However, this is a social problem, and certainly we have done nothing to tackle the seasonal or the regular unemployment that occurs year in and year out. We have done nothing to tackle the man who is displaced, and loses his work because of technological changes, dislocation in industry and automation.

Further, we have done nothing to study seriously the problem of minimum wage, portable pensions and a minimum pension after a stipulated period of time.

The last point that I would touch upon—and we can go into more detail on it as we go through the estimates—is the matter of workmen's compensation.

Herein, Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when we have to exercise the thinking that we are endowed with, and come up with some answer to the criticism that is made of the workmen's compensation principle today, and it is simply this.

A man loses a finger in 1923 and is paid "x" dollars. If a man loses a finger in 1959 he is paid 4 times this. The answer that is made is, "That is the insurance principle, we can do nothing about it."

Well, if we adopt that attitude, and adopt the attitude that we can just do nothing about some of these things, I say to this House that we will eventually find ourselves so in conflict with the out-and-out socialists that we will be gobbled up.

I think that is the basic concern that I want to point out to this House today. The conflict, Mr. Chairman, as I see it of the future, is between a free society, exercising its social responsibilities in an orderly fashion, and those who would abuse the very rights that they intend to protect by legislating and requiring all to conform to a statism system.

Mr. Chairman, I realize these remarks are very general but I do want to emphasize and underscore all of them when I say today that, in conjunction with workmen's compensation, we can work it out.

I have been told, and I have read several times, that the dollar has depreciated in a steady fashion over the last 50 years and that scientifically we can measure it. We cannot measure it from year to year but over, I think, a period of 50 years it depreciated at a rate of about a certain percentage each year.

Now, we could overcome this problem by adding, to the cost and contribution that is required to be made by the individual in industry for workmen's compensation, that 1 per cent. or 2 per cent. or 3 per cent. which would take care of the depreciation in the cost of the dollar. This depreciation presumably is going to continue into the future, and in this way we would overcome the weaknesses that currently beset a man who is required to try to help and support himself after injury with fewer dollars than a man who receives a similar injury in a subsequent year.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is maybe the most worthwhile practical suggestion that I can make at this time.

In mentioning this I am very sincere. It is a suggestion, Mr. Chairman, to which this House could give ready and speedy implementation.

To summarize again, I simply point out, that it is an historic fact that the dollar has depreciated in an orderly fashion. We can measure it, not from year to year, but over an extended period of time, and we can protect against it intelligently. Mr. Chairman, these are the remarks I want to make at this particular time, in a general way, and permit the development in each of them under the specific items as we reach them. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on labour conditions generally in the province. There are some estimates in here that I will just touch on. I will speak on them in more detail later.

The first one, I would like just to touch on, is minimum wages. Now, we have an Act at the present time which applies only to women. I think that the Act should apply to men, too. I was quite surprised this weekend, when I was back in Hamilton talking to some of the people there, to discover that one of the plants in Hamilton, has a starting rate for men running from 55 cents an hour to $1.10 an hour. That is not a living wage at all for anybody.

As far as the unions are concerned, there is not too much worry about the minimum wage. But we have to bear in mind that there are still many unorganized plants in this province, and I do think that the companies are taking advantage of the group of people such as in Hamilton, where we have 17,000 out of work. These firms are hiring people, actually, at wages less than they can get if they are on unemployment insurance. And I think that this government has to take a realistic stand and make a decision that laws have to be passed to protect these people who, at the present time, may not be organized into unions.

Another point I would like to touch on is The Apprenticeship Act. I feel that it is a good Act. I think we must have more apprentices. They are definitely needed in industry. But apprenticeship training also creates problems. I would just like to speak for a minute on that.

We will take an apprentice learning to be a mechanic in a garage, as an example. He has to serve 5 years, his pay is not too great, and we understand he comes here to Toronto for courses every so often. The government pays a certain portion of his wages to live on.

But the problem nowadays is that a lot of these young chaps are married, maybe with two or three children, and it is impossible for them to come down here and live on the amount of money they get. They do not have an opportunity of saving very much money while they are going through their trade. So I do think there should be some larger compensation for these married men.

On workmen's compensation, I feel there are two or three things that are lacking very badly. I do feel that the waiting period of 7 days is too long. When a man is hurt, that is definitely the time he needs money to keep his family going.

Another problem is that of a fellow working in a plant who drops something on his fingers. He is sent up to the hospital for an X-ray. Therefore he loses half a day, maybe a day and a half and he gets no pay at all. The company pays him nothing for that, and I feel, once the compensation case is taken up, that he should be paid right back to the date the injury occurred, provided that it is only a half a day or a couple of days that he is off. I say this because that is the very time when he needs money.

I am very sorry to say that we have no women representing constituencies in this House today. I think it is very important that we should have women playing a part in politics.

But, since there are no women here, I am going to say just a few words on their behalf. And that is on the question of equal pay for equal work.

We have in our legislation today a clause, giving them a little protection—but very little indeed. When we get down to the shop level—and I see it every day—it really means nothing. The Act offers no protection to the women in the factory. We will say that they have a job set up and a man works on it. Then they turn around and maybe split it up into 3 parts, and employ 3 women doing the 3 parts in one-third of the time. That change takes them out from under the Act. They have no opportunity of getting comparable pay, although they are actually doing comparable work. In another case, they will have exactly the same job on a production line, with a man working on it on one shift, and a lady working on it on another shift. The only change may be that a box which is fairly heavy has to be lifted down to the floor, or up on the bench, and they have a handler coming around doing that. And by doing that, a company takes the position that it is not exactly the same job, and therefore, that girl will be working for 40 cents, 50 cents, and in some cases 60 cents an hour less than the man.

I think we should be realistic in these days, and have realistic laws to protect that girl. As long as it is a comparable job, she should be paid the going rate. I think that she should have this protection, so that she can make the same type of money as the man.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Chairman, and hon. members, I would like to say a word or so in regards to our hon. Minister of Labour for the good job that he is doing, and the legislation that has been provided here for the great people of Ontario, especially the labour people, since he has been Minister of Labour.

Speaking about the workmen's compensation, I would like to mention that, in 1953, the widows' pensions were increased from $50 to $75 per month. This increase, however, applied only to those becoming widows after the amended legislation was passed.

We now have before us legislation to make the widows' pensions $75 for all. Certainly this is a measure justified in the light of increasing living costs. I presume that this change will become effective at once.

It was just 10 years ago that the compensation was raised from 66½ per cent. to 75 per cent. of the earnings, with a maximum of $3,000. In 1952, the waiting period was reduced from 7 days to 5 days, the maximum for computing compensation was raised to $4,000. Then, in 1957, the maximum was raised to $5,000. That is very good work on the part of the great hon. Minister of Labour, and this great government.

In 1958, the board opened a new $6 million rehabilitation centre, with 500 beds, at Downsview. It is the best centre of its kind in America. If the centre can fit the injured man to return to his former job, well and good; if not, then no effort is spared to train him in some other line, so that he can become reasonably self-supporting.

There is no government on this continent more friendly to labour than this great government in Ontario. Their approach to the problems of labour is indicated by their record.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, in saying a few words in general on the labour estimates, I would advise the hon. member for Welland to discuss The Workmen's Compensation Act and some of the labour Acts with some of the people in the particular plant he works with, and I am sure he will come up with a different view to just what we need in the province.

Mr. Chairman, I was quite surprised with the presentation the hon. Minister made in his opening remarks on his estimates this year. I do not know just why he is so modest in his approach. In the past years, he spent considerable time and dealt mainly with the great industrial expansion in the province, patting on the back the industries for the great job they had done. Always, I felt, he had left out the important statement of what contribution the employees have made to this great industrial expansion.

Mr. Chairman, I want to just deal with the brief presented to the hon. Minister and the cabinet by the Ontario federation of labour, and I do not think that anyone could use a better document to express to the public what is needed in the province, and the interest of the trade union movement in our whole society, and not just in their own members.

I know that the brief was presented to the cabinet, but I do not know how many of the private hon. members on the government side have taken time to read the document. I wish that, when these presentations are made to the cabinet, all the hon. members would get them and pursue them thoroughly, so that, when it is debated here, they would know what it is all about, and could express their opinions on some of the specific things.

Now, the brief covers everything in general—the labour relations, the provincial economic policy, working conditions across the province, education, workmen's compensation, health services, anti-discrimination laws and many other aspects of legislation not under the jurisdiction of The Department of Labour.

I think it points out that they are not a selfish group, that their feelings are basic, that they want to do something for the whole of the province, all of the people, including those organized and unorganized, and maybe those who should be organized.

Now, some of the points have been covered by the previous speakers. But there are things like statutory holidays that the federation has asked be made mandatory. Why are we so backward in this province? The organized groups can collectively bargain and get statutory holidays. I think in a collective agreement statutory holidays are almost standard, but there are thousands of unorganized workers in this province who are not enjoying holidays comparable to the great masses of those who are organized.

Those on the executive side do enjoy every holiday, but these other groups and services in some plants are not organized, and either have to go to work on a statutory holiday or—if they have to take a holiday because it is the general thing in the community—they lose a day's pay. I think one important step would be to make it mandatory for 8 statutory holidays to be given with pay across the province. There does not seem to be any argument against this.

The hon. Minister has given some of his arguments that it would put out of business a lot of small industries if they had to pay these fringe benefits. I do not think that is the case. I do not think it has been found to be the case in other provinces where progressive legislation has been brought in. In fact, I think it does increase the benefits.

Regarding vacations, I am going to deal with this in a bill I have presented, and I do not think anyone can argue, in this high economy and industrial expansion of this province, that anyone should have less than 3 weeks' vacation a year. It contributes to the health of the employee, and it also makes a contribution to the unemployment problem. If we dealt with figures, it would certainly be enlightening to see the employment it would create if everyone working in industry, and in services, were given 3 weeks' vacation a year.

The argument might be that it would put a lot of people out of business. Well, I do not think that should be the criterion if we are going to try to balance the benefits across the province. We have to take a serious look at this sort of thing.

Regarding hours of work, there is hardly any excuse now for not reducing the hours of work in this province to 40 hours from 48. In Saskatchewan and British Columbia they have the 44-hour week, and the 44-hour a week for women alone in Alberta and Manitoba, yet here we are, in this great industrial province, still with a 48-hour week.

And under The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act it does not restrict them to the 40-hour week.

Under the Act they can work 100 hours overtime a year and that, broken down, allows them to work 50 hours a week. Actually the Act, as far as I can ascertain, is not being enforced. If they want to exceed this 100 hours a year, all they have to do is write a letter to the department and they can go ahead and work the extra overtime.

I feel, if we are going to find work for people, and if we want to do something about their health, we should enact a standard uniform 40-hour week so that we have some uniformity in the standards across the province.

One important thing that I think was pointed out in the brief is the foundry regulations. We remember it has taken them 10 years to really get a set of safety regulations in the foundry industry that does remove some of the hazards in that activity. But it seems to me they will not be effective until we make the foundry regulations part of The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act, so that the inspectors can have the necessary enforcement powers under the Act.

Now, in regard to workmen's compensation, Mr. Chairman, which has been mentioned, there are some additional points that are very important. This may seem to be unimportant, but one of the sections that I think might be abused is the free choice of a doctor. I feel a case where it may be abused is where, once the employee is injured in the plant and the plant doctor—or doctor that the employer calls in at the emergent time to look after him—is thereafter assumed to be the doctor he has to be treated by for the rest of his disability. It should be made clear that he can, after his first treatment when he is able to make a choice, choose his own doctor.

The waiting periods, of course, have been mentioned. If a person has been injured, there does not seem to be any justification why he should not be paid for his lost earnings, if it is one day or more.

Mr. Chairman, where it has become customary to base compensation for temporary total disability on the worker's earnings 4 weeks prior to the accident, the employers are now insisting that a 12-month period be used in accordance with section 39 of the Act.

Strict compliance with the terms of the Act, in this instance, gives rise to administrative difficulties and inequities. The federation ask, therefore, that section 39 of the Act be amended to permit the board to use the 4-week period for the purpose of calculating average earnings. They do not feel that section 40 is working properly, and it should be looked into. Further, Mr. Chairman, I feel the minimum benefit for temporary total disability should be raised from $15 to $25.

In regard to rehabilitation—I think this is important—certainly as I said the other day we have one of the finest compensation Acts on the continent, and we have the finest rehabilitation building and department. But there does not seem to be a satisfactory ending to it. Once a person has rehabilitated to the point where he can do something then a job must be found for him so he can take part in our society.

There must be more co-operation from industry in placing these people in jobs. It might be that the best thing to do would be to make it mandatory that an industry, which has over a certain number of employees on the payroll, take the employee back to work. Certainly it might not be feasible, if they have just a small group, to find a job and take him back.

The other point that I think is very important concerns those in the temporary total disability category. They set the pension at 75 per cent. of the difference between what such a person would have been getting for his own rate and what he would be getting for a suitable job. What is happening in many cases, because of the medical opinion that he is ready for light work, is that benefits are reduced, but he does not have a job. I think such a person should either be kept on full compensation, and be given the full amount of benefits, and get the same as if he was totally disabled, until he gets a job. I will let it go at that, Mr. Chairman, and will have more to say on the specific votes.

An hon. member: Is that a threat or a promise?

Mr. Gisborn: Both.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to briefly reassert the remarks my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) has made. I cannot help thinking that today in Ontario, and even Canada, we pay a terribly high price for this so-called prosperity, when we think of the thousands of people in this province who are vainly hunting for employment. Right in this House today there is a man who has been searching in vain. He fought with the air force, and he is searching vainly to get work, and he cannot get it. And I think this is one of the most fundamental problems that we have to face.

I think that we have to do it on a broad basis at the start. I think that we have to look at the planning that is going on in our province and in our country.

I agree thoroughly, with my hon. leader, that we seem to be shrugging our shoulders at the fact that, when winter comes, automatically a number of men must be laid off. And I do not think that is necessary in a country like ours. I think that we can have planning, we can have inducement for industry, in order that through taxes they might continue winter employment and produce during the winter months. I think that it is well to have prior planning, in relation to jobs, in the whole new area of technology automation.

I have the feeling that we just wait until something happens and people are unemployed. We do not have enough planning ahead, even right in the technical schools themselves. I do not think there is enough forward looking and planning about what kind of new skills should be developed.

I think also that there is lack of planning relating to older citizens and the great groups of people who are unemployed. We do not suggest to them that we will use them through retraining under the M schedule of The Vocational Education Act which permits exactly that—retraining older people, who no longer can find work, to fit into other jobs.

I simply would like to say that I do not think we should look on unemployment as something that is inevitable, something that is part of progress and prosperity. This is the real challenge that we must meet through not only a study with management and labour, but also through a very close manpower study. Then we will know where changes are going to take place, what type of people we should be training and re-training to fit into technological advances.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair that I should say that, in my opinion, the man at the head of the department is doing what I think is a good job. Of course, all of us being human as we are, we are prone to make errors and mistakes.

Now, sir, going back over the years, I can well think back to the time when the hon. Minister of Labour's hair was kind of blond or sandy, and when I had hair, too, and when both of us were working together as a team back in the year 1943, and prior to that time. It is amazing how things change. However, I am assuming that they are all for the best.

Now, there is one thing about which I have always been critical of the hon. Minister, and this is nothing personal at all, because I have oftentimes said that I think that he has tried and worked hard. It is this problem of bringing employee and employer together on some common ground, even prior to the time that a strike occurs. It appears that he always waits until after the strike happens, and then he comes in, after it happens, upon being invited in by both parties involved.

I think that we have to treat this thing much the same as the fire department of any area, who go around and inspect and find out what is brewing, what is cooking. Then if, in the opinion of the department, it feels that there is now, in progress, the building up of a thing that might eventually become a strike, I think, if such a thing is foreseen, that the department should step into the picture for the purpose of bringing the parties into the hon. Minister's office or to some office, and trying to point out to them the awful effects that they will have upon the province in event that an industry goes out on strike.

Because indeed, in the event of a strike, it is not only the employer or the employee who suffers, it is all the people of this province. Therefore the hon. Minister's job, I should say, and the job of the department, ought to be to prevent as many of these strikes as it can.

Hon. Mr. Daley: We are doing that all the time.

Mr. Reaume: Well, I do not want to have any arguments. But what I would like to emphasize is that I do not think the hon. Minister is going far enough. There is a man in the employ of his department by the name of Mr. Fine, who, in my opinion, is a good man. Incidentally, while I am at it, I have to put in this plug. He was brought into the department by a Liberal, while the Liberals were in power. Now there is a man—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): We never fire civil servants here.

Mr. Reaume: There is a man who, in my opinion, has done a very good job, and I think that what the hon. Minister ought to do is to go out into the province wherever he can, regardless of what it costs, and bring in more people of the calibre of Mr. Fine. In my opinion, sir, he has done more to stop and prevent strikes in this province than any one single man in it, and that would indicate, I think, that we need more and more Fines. The other point being—I do not mean fines from courts, of course.

Now, the other point is that, in the event of a strike, I do not think, sir, that the hon. Minister should wait until he is on the point of being invited by both parties before he goes in and sits down and talks to them. I say this because in many, many instances, he will find, in the event of a strike, that the employee has the employer over the barrel or vice versa, and one party will come and talk but the other will not.

I think that under the atmosphere of his office, if he was to bring two of the warring factions into his office, and tell them that it is all right for the unions to be fighting only in the interests of the unions, and employers to be fighting only in the interests of employers, but ask them who is going to help and to work for the interest of the people of the province.

And indeed in every city, and I know it well, the outcome of a strike leaves the community in very bad shape. It leaves them in the position where indeed, very seldom, anybody wins a strike; everybody suffers—the people of the area, the people of the province.

As I think back to my home town of some of these strikes there in the auto industry. I think of one in particular.

I can think of the Chrysler strike where the hon. Minister and his officers came, I think, on a Friday, and they sat Friday afternoon and all day Saturday, and it was agreed, prior to the time that they arrived, that they would sit until 10 o'clock on Sunday night, but that at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, the hon. Minister packed up his bags and his officers, too, and they went out of town.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): He said that—

Mr. Reaume: I still say, and I think honestly, that had they stayed there and sat in that meeting, sir, until 10 o'clock at night, that strike could have been settled. Because, as proof of that, within 24 hours after they went out of town, we settled it ourselves. And so, if they had stayed, they probably could have settled it.

Hon. Mr. Daley: We settled it before we left.

Mr. Reaume: They did not, that is not true. They left and they settled not one thing. Now the hon. Minister had better go back over his books again, because there is one that he did not settle.

Now, there was another strike—these things are important. There was another one, the great Ford strike. Now, let us just speak about that one, if you will, that occurred in the fall of 1954. Here is what happened again.

The hon. Minister came on down with a group of people, and before the deadline came, they had again packed up their bags and gone away. That night at 10 o'clock, some 10,000 people went out on strike, picketed those plants and that strike went on for months and months. It put the city of Windsor and the province in a very strained position.

Now, I just want to say this. The hon. Minister uses some of the most unorthodox methods of settling a strike that I have ever heard of. In that instance, we could have settled that strike in Windsor. The hon. Minister called down the company and he called down the union. They left Windsor at 2.45 a.m. on a Sunday. The Speaker of the House at that time was a very fine man, a man of the cloth, who knew as much about the problems that existed between the working classes of people and employers in this province as I know about what is actually happening over in Asia right now.

This man brought them into the Parliament Buildings on a Sunday afternoon, and started praying to the Holy Spirit to come through a hole in the roof to settle that strike.

As a consequence, with all the praying and with all the help of the Holy Spirit—and indeed I think we all ought to invite His help—but here is what happened then.

Now, I do not blame this on the Holy Spirit, but I blame it on the fumbling of the department and the methods they employed in that strike. By getting the Speaker of the House into that field, they prolonged that strike by 13 weeks.

Now, if we add up the wages lost by 10,000 people working at Ford for 13 weeks time, we will find that many hundreds of thousands of dollars were poured down the drain. I suggest that, after this, the hon. Minister keep the Speaker out of the deal. The matter, I think, of settling strikes in this province is the hon. Minister's job, and I think that he is understaffed—

Hon. Mr. Daley: I did not get the Speaker in—

Mr. Reaume: Well, he knew about it, everybody else did. It was all over the papers of the province.

I think that the hon. Minister's office is very much understaffed. I think he is doing a grand job with what he has. I think that he is at the head of one of the most important departments of the government, and I think that what he should ask for is more funds, more funds, build it up and go on and employ the very best men that he can find. And he should pay them, certainly.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, it is always nice to join in a little revival meeting with the hon. member for Essex North.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we spent two days on the estimates of The Department of the Attorney-General last week and, for all I know, maybe the estimates of The Department of Labour will take a week. But I say to those hon. members, like the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby) who has left his seat and who has left me a note urging me to do what I could to get these through quickly, that we would like to oblige him, as well as all the other hon. private members on the government's side.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are conscious, and perhaps a new member is more conscious than some of the older members that, traditionally and historically in dealing with the estimates, it is not only the right but the duty of the private member to get up and voice his complaint—on both sides of the House as my hon. friend in front said—but perhaps the complaints will have a greater frequency over here on this side.

However, I could join in with the hon. member for Essex North and complain about a long strike that involved my constituency. But I merely say, to the hon. Minister of Labour, that the strike in 1958 did not require to last 84 days, and it would not have lasted 84 days, with its attendant dislocation, if his department had moved a little more quickly, with a little more emphatic action, in order to bring the parties together.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Mr. Chairman, that is completely unfair. We were in that strike—

Mr. Sopha: It is a matter of opinion. But I assert that it is true. As I said before, when that strike began and there were 18,000 people unemployed, we read—the press reports will corroborate what I say—that the hon. Minister of Labour could not meet the parties because he was settling the beer strike.

Hon. Mr. Daley: That is all nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I want to say to my hon. friend that—

Mr. Sopha: Now, point of order, Mr. Chairman, point of order. This is an old technique of the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is talking nonsense, pure nonsense.

Mr. Sopha: He can make his speech next, I am making mine now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, he is all wrong.

Mr. Sopha: I am not wrong at all.

Mr. Reaume: He is perfectly right.

Hon. Mr. Frost: If he drops around and sees me, I will tell him all about it.

Mr. Sopha: Well, one of these days, Mr. Chairman, adopting some of the techniques of the hon. Prime Minister—which I admire very much, and which I am going to seek to emulate as the years go by because of the success he has had with them—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He had better start right now.

Mr. Sopha: —I will perhaps table some clippings that show that the hon. Minister of Labour announced, when that strike began, that he had to settle the beer strike first.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was there myself before the strike.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make my remarks of a more general nature than that.

As a new member, Mr. Chairman, I wonder which department of this government it was that was responsible, or took any measure of responsibility, in finding jobs for unemployed persons. I would think that this department would be the one that should charge itself with that responsibility.

I do not conceive how they can do anything of any great importance, in that regard, when the budget of this department is—as I see it is—a little over $3 million. This seems an exceedingly minimum amount with which to try to do anything in the province as a whole, to try to find jobs for those thousands of people in this province who are presently unemployed.

This certainly is an opportunity to ask—and I do ask, Mr. Chairman, but I ask rhetorically for fear somebody will get up and seek to answer the question now—what they are going to do about the great dislocation at Elliot Lake, and the unemployment that will result from that, when they are laid off this year.

What steps will this department take to try to assist those people this very year—perhaps 4,000 of them with their families—who will be out of work as a result of the curtailment of production in that community?

Now we might find out something from the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) but he is not in his seat today. We in this group hope that he will get up and suggest something that he hopes this government will do to assist those families that are going to suffer from the shutdown of mines in that area.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to—yes, my hon. friend, whose prompting assistance is always of great benefit to me, says that they had a parallel last year in the Avro situation, and apparently this government did nothing about that either.

An hon. member: They do not want to think about that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We won all the seats around there anyway.

Mr. Sopha: Apparently they do not want to think about it. They apparently have no plans, and they are not sitting down to think about it at all. But I feel that I have a responsibility and I do not, Mr. Chairman, seek to assert the role of a smart alec at all. But, coming from the constituency of Sudbury, which is next door to Algoma-Manitoulin, I feel that I have a responsibility, if the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin will not, to say to this government—and to the hon. gentlemen sitting in the first two rows over there—that they have to do something about those people at Elliot Lake, and that they have to do it promptly.

And what better environment of speech could there be, how could one exercise the larynx any better than to cite, for the two front rows over there, the famous phrase that was peddled up and down this country by one of their friends. I do not put any responsibility on their shoulders for the phrase. But one person whom they know very well said, when he was seeking some favour from the electorate of this country, that "not a single man will suffer from unemployment as long as I am in office."

Some Liberal hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Sopha: And it ought to be said to them, too, and it has not been said heretofore, but certainly, we are willing to crystallize in speech the assertion that the people in this province would be better served if the government in office here were of a different political stripe than the one up in Ottawa.

Hon. J. A. Maloney (Minister of Mines): It is not. It is not. They said—

Mr. Sopha: Now, the hon. Minister of Mines says that it is not, but he and I may be around this House long enough to see the day when it is.

Hon. Mr. Maloney: I doubt that very much. I doubt that very much. The hon. member has to show a little more than he has got over there now, before that will ever happen. People are too wise, too sensible.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Chairman, you know we can say to them, what we really think, we can say to them—he will not last forever.

Hon. Mr. Maloney: It looks like he will. I will bring him in as a mummy.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say something about a specific matter, and I conceive it to be a matter of importance. That is with respect to workmen's compensation. Now, the gentlemen who make up that board—or perhaps I should say first, we all know that Ontario was the first jurisdiction to put in an Act or put in the principle of this type.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): The Conservatives.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Tory government.

Mr. Sopha: I say to the hon. Prime Minister, I do not mind a little digression.

I will say something that has been on my mind for a few days, and that is that we know over here, too, that collective bargaining in this country—compulsive collective bargaining—was put into operation for the first time in this country by a Liberal government. In that regard, we are the fathers of collective bargaining.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Wait till I tell the hon. member the truth about that. I will complete his education.

Mr. Sopha: In the field of labour legislation, we do not have to take a back seat to that party in any regard.

Well, that board, as I was saying, is staffed—I am going to tell hon. members something nice about the workmen's compensation board—it is staffed by a very able group on the board, very courteous gentlemen. If one wants to go down there and have a tour around their plant, they are only too eager to do that for any hon. member of this Legislature. They will show hon. members a map down there, that they have, which shows the great number of countries—I think something in the order of 44 or 45 countries—from which they have received delegations to study their system. And that is a good thing for our province, and it shows how high we are held in the estimation of other people. Even over on this side we are pleased by that, too.

But there is one thing about it, that the incidence of accidents can pretty well be judged, as the hon. Minister of Labour knows, by the premiums that the various industries have to pay. And when I tell hon. members that the premium in the lumbering and pulp and paper industries is about $14 per $100 of wages—in mining it is somewhere around $4—

Hon. Mr. Maloney: It is down to $12.

Mr. Sopha: Well, it has gone down since last year, because last year it was $14. I am happy to hear that. But that indicates the frequency of accidents in that industry.

Similarly, in the mining industry, the rate is fairly high. But it is a very good thing to be able to say that it is much less than it was a number of years ago.

Now, in northeastern Ontario, bearing in mind the large number of claims we have from northeastern Ontario, the people up there—as the hon. Prime Minister would say, those good, fine and splendid people—have been asking that board for years to establish a branch office in northeastern Ontario, and particularly in the Sudbury district. They have a small one at North Bay which I suppose looks after the people along the Ontario Northland Railway. But delegation after delegation has come down from the Sudbury area—and I believe the Elliot Lake area—and has asked that board to establish a branch office in Sudbury, which could be of assistance to people who are making claims under the Act.

Now, every hon. member of this House will know that, perhaps, the most frequent visitors that we get in our office, if we happen to have an office downtown in our constituency, is the person who wants some assistance with his claim for the workman's compensation board. And, in the period of less than a year that I have had the privilege of serving the people of Sudbury, I can say that, of the number of people who have come to see me for assistance in governmental matters, those who want help in workmen's compensation outnumber all others by 10 to 1.

And I, with some others, again made a trip down to the board, and asked them if they would consider establishing a branch office in the Sudbury area. Their answer is that they will not do it, because they feel it can be administered better from the main office in Toronto here.

Now, perhaps one will realize the difficulty it entails for any hon. member of this House to do something concrete to assist those people who are in need of help, or more important, feel they are in need of help, when it is so far away to the main office. And it involves this, and I have made this practice, I have waited until there were 5 or 6 of them, and then have made a special trip down here to see the officials on the board.

Now, I say to the hon. Minister of Labour, and it is open to him to change the statutes, that this is not an efficient way of dealing with these people who are aggrieved. The member of the Legislature really is not the person who can be of assistance to him, and I would think that Act could be better administered and give help to the solution of those problems, if they had regional offices all over the province to help in the processing of their complaints.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Would the hon. member permit me to say just a few words?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I can only sum that up this way. In the United States, for every dollar that is taken in, about 40-45 cents goes back to the injured workman. In Ontario, it is something like 92-93 cents of every dollar.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We have a socialized system here.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It all comes from private industries.

Hon. Mr. Daley: If we were to start to establish headquarters all over the province, with the necessary personnel and everything—well, I do not know, maybe it might be some value, in some cases—but it certainly would reduce the amount of returns that we are able to give to the injured people of this province.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am not for a moment, Mr. Chairman, suggesting that they should establish regional offices in order to process these complaints. I am merely saying that they should have regional offices to channel the complaints to the board, and to ask for a review of the file. I say this because, strangely enough, the board does change its mind. I suppose all hon. members of this House have had this experience, and there are a great many sitting here who have had this experience much more than I have. The board does alter its decisions, if one presents to them new evidence, if one gets another examination.

And I am merely asking that these regional offices be set up and staffed by personnel from the board itself, in order to deal with these people, and let them resort to those officials rather than the member of this House, and make the complaint to him. This official can write to the board as well as an hon. member can, and ask if the man can have another medical examination, or if the man can have a hearing.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): It will still go back to the member.

Mr. Sopha: We all know, I say to the hon. Minister of Labour, that the only recourse that is given to a man under that Act—and it is proper that it is—is an appeal I believe under section 36, and when the portcullis comes down from the board, and they say "We will take no further action on this file," the only resort then is to write them a letter and demand a hearing before the full board under section 36.

Now, just to sum up, I merely say that people from the board should do those things themselves. We are not the people to do it, and we cannot properly serve all our other constituents if so much of our time is taken up in looking after claims of that nature.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what the good hon. member is for.

Mr. Grossman: No points there, Elmer.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, before I go on to the comments I would like to state that I was more than a little surprised by the comments made by the hon. Prime Minister during an earlier part of these estimates, when he said that this government never fires any civil servants.

They ruthlessly chopped off a bunch of casual employees not very long ago. I do not know how those two—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say that was done with the understanding and the co-operation of the civil service association.

Mr. Bryden: Well, they certainly did not give that impression to the public. They were not understanding and appreciating it and—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member does not get it, he gives the wrong one, that is the trouble with you people—

Mr. Grossman: It had nothing to do with party politics.

Mr. Bryden: I am not saying it had anything to do with party politics. I know that they can think in terms of nothing else. I am just talking about—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: I did not hear the hon. member, but guess I did not miss very much.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The great education of Saskatchewan where he engaged in party politics when he was a civil servant. He ought to know. They are great experts themselves.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the hon. Prime Minister, as usual, cannot get Saskatchewan off his brain and, as usual, he does not know what he is talking about when he deals with that subject.

However, I would like to refer to some of the subject matter that was dealt with, in an introductory way, by the hon. leader of the Opposition and one or two of his supporters, some of the broader problems relating to labour and labour-management relations. He indicated, and I would agree with him, that it is desirable for labour and management to co-operate wherever possible. I think that is a sound approach, provided we keep it in a realistic perspective.

I have seen a lot of proposals put forward under the guise of labour-management co-operation, but what they really involve—now

I would like to make it clear that I am not now talking about what the hon. leader of the Opposition was saying—but I have seen proposals of a general nature put forward of that type, and what they really meant was the domination of management over labour when we got down to specific cases.

For that reason, I would like to suggest to my hon. friends to my immediate right, and others, that when we talk about these general principles, that we should also keep the specific applications in mind, because general principles can sometimes get a little fuzzy.

On this particular point, I would like to put forward the proposition that we cannot have true co-operation, or true partnership, between labour and management except on the basis of equality of the two partners. That is a point of view that I think bears more emphasis that it is getting at the present time in this country.

I have referred on earlier occasions to the sort of anti-labour campaign that is going on in this country at the present time. We have a situation of heavy concentration of corporate wealth, and a campaign indicating that labour is too big and too powerful, when actually the situation is just the other way around. We should be encouraging the growth of the labour movement.

Unfortunately, we have a bill before us in this House right now which certainly does nothing positive to encourage the growth of the trade union movement, and contains a few more restrictions, in addition to those already there, on its legitimate activities.

It is not in order for me to debate that bill now and I will not make any further reference to it. But I regret the present trend, under what I submit is the impetus of a very heavy propaganda campaign against the labour movement, based on the claim—quite unsubstantiated by any facts—that labour is too big and too powerful and, therefore, ought to be cut down.

Now, I really think, Mr. Chairman, that it is time that this sort of contention, which is regularly made in newspapers and in many other places, ought to be examined.

I would like to take, as an example, the largest trade union in this country. The trade union which has the largest number of members in this country is the United Steel Workers of America. The total income from dues paid in by members of that union, for their union membership, in this country adds up, according to my calculations—I have not got the figures from the union—would be that total dues paid in by members of the United Steel Workers of America in Canada amount to about $5 million. People will say: "That is a great amount of money, that is a tremendous amount of money, look how powerful it makes these fellows." Well, let us bear in mind—

Mr. Reaume: It helps you with the party.

Mr. Bryden: It does not help us—there are a lot of myths going around about how they use their money, but they publish financial statements—

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): How much did they spend in the last election?

Mr. Bryden: They did not spend anything, as far as we were concerned.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Tell that to somebody else.

Mr. Belanger: Now, I will tell him stories.

Mr. Bryden: Well, he can tell me stories, but I will tell him facts, and I am talking as the administrative officer who was in charge of conducting the election campaign in this province. I can tell him they did not give us one cent, or as far as I know, spend anything—

Mr. Singer: How much did they spend?

Mr. Bryden: They did not spend anything that I know of.

I will say this further, that I will be very happy to receive contributions for political purposes from any democratic trade union that cares to make them. I will be proud to receive them, and I will say that we have received assistance in various ways from the United Steel Workers of America.

I am not here to discuss that particular matter now. I am not here to discuss that. I will be happy to discuss it with the hon. gentlemen at some other time, and I will be happy to see them table in this House a statement of their receipts and expenses.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: I apologize, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have been allowed to be moved a long way out of order.

I would like to get back to the point I was making which related to the—imagine these hon. gentlemen over here talking about people being out of order—the income of the United Steel Workers of America.

As I say, what the workers pay in is about $5 million a year, which may be treated as a large amount of money.

But let me call to your attention, Mr. Chairman, that that money is for all their purposes at all levels—their contributions to their international organization to assist in its activities, their maintenance of necessary national staff that they need to carry on their activities, the provision of funds for their affiliation to the Canadian Labour Congress to assist the overall trade union movement in this country, and for their administration of their own local organizations.

That total amount of money is for all their purposes in this country, and whatever purposes they, by democratic decision, decide to use it for. But it is the total income they have.

We will take just one of the companies with which they negotiate, the Steel Company of Canada. I will quote its net profits according to the last figure I saw in the Financial Post, which may be about a year old, but the figure is close enough for the purpose I am using it. Its net profits after taxes—in other words the money it had left over after it had paid all its bills of all kinds—

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Dividends.

Mr. Bryden: Surely dividends are profits. What is the hon. Minister talking about? Is he trying to put forward an argument that dividends are a cost? Their net taxes after profits in the last year I saw were $15 million. One company which this union has to deal with, one company which this—

Mr. Singer: What percentage of investment was that?

Mr. Bryden: One company that this union had to deal with had an amount of money left over, after it had paid all its expenses of all kinds—the amount of money it had left over for whatever purposes it wanted to use it—was 3 times as great as the total income for all purposes of the United Steel Workers of America.

Mr. Grossman: What did they use it for?

Mr. Bryden: I am pointing out one fact. I realize that this may be a little over the head of the hon. member for St. Andrew, but I am saying their income, after they had paid their expenses, was 3 times as great as the total income for all purposes of this union. This is only one company that this union has to deal with out of a great many. It is the biggest—

Mr. Chairman: May I suggest that the hon. member for Woodbine perhaps refrain from straying—

Mr. Bryden: I do not believe that I am straying from the estimates at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that perhaps you are straying a bit afield. A little too far, it is a matter of degree.

Mr. Bryden: At any rate, I have made the point I am trying to make. I submit that our problem is not a problem of any excessive power of the labour movement, quite the contrary. It is the problem of a movement, which has quite limited resources, dealing with very powerful aggregations of capital in the corporate structure of this country.

Furthermore, I was very interested in the remarks that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope) was making, the other day, about that fine democratic socialist country of Sweden, where 97 per cent. of the workers are in trade unions, and there the co-operation between labour and management is on a very high level. There is a minimum of conflict between them, whereas in this country we have only about 33 per cent. organized, so—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): If the CCF would keep out of it there would be—

Mr. Bryden: Do not try to blame us for the inadequate, fundamentally anti-labour legislation that this government has put on the books. The hon. Minister himself refers to a country where there is a government following the same sort of philosophy as we follow, and, as he pointed out himself, 97 per cent. of the workers belong to unions there. Furthermore, there is a high degree of co-operation between labour and management.

I believe that if we took steps to encourage the development, rather than discourage the development of the trade union movement in this country, that would be the basic step towards getting the kind of co-operation between labour and management which the hon. leader of the Opposition has been talking about, and which I think he has been very properly talking about.

I think it is an important matter to raise under the estimates of The Department of Labour and on other opportunities.

However, I just want to put some factual content into the very general statements he made. I would like also to deal with the question of unemployment that has been referred to, to some degree, and I think also it has been properly referred to, and I think one of the hon. gentlemen here, I am not sure which one—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is in order—

Mr. Bryden: It is always out of order when I start talking about these things.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am objecting very strongly to this proposition that half a dozen hon. members should talk about unemployment, and then the hon. Prime Minister steps in with the guillotine, and starts to pressure us. Now, I think the hon. Prime Minister should be put in his place, and if he wants to object to it, let him do so in the first place.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Who are the half a dozen members? Name the 6 of them.

Mr. MacDonald: I have talked about unemployment.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Name the 6.

Mr. Chairman: May I suggest to the hon. members that they try to keep to the term of the Legislature, and to speak to the chair instead of members speaking to each other across the floor.

I would suggest that the hon. member for Woodbine has strayed a bit far afield. Now, we do allow a great deal of latitude in the estimates—it is a matter of degree—and I would suggest that perhaps he is extending the degree a little bit too far, and should try to get a little closer to the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I point out that there are items in these estimates in which matters of unemployment can be discussed, but there is not a thing that I can see—

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. Prime Minister not point out—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I have just pointed out to the hon. member now.

Mr. MacDonald: He is always a little late.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think we could make better progress if we could confine ourselves to the wide ambit that these estimates do provide for discussion. But there is not any use in discussing the United Nations on an estimate such as this. We can still leave plenty of opportunity to discuss unemployment in the proper estimate.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, of course it is out of order—

Hon. Mr. Frost: In municipal affairs. There is an item there.

Mr. Chairman: May I ask the hon. member for Woodbine to proceed.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I submit to you, sir, that if matters of unemployment are not matters of interest to The Department of Labour, it is—

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are quite interested. Of course they are. But this is not the place to discuss them.

Mr. Bryden:—certainly a bad state of affairs. I can think unemployment is a problem that extends beyond the labour field. But I can think of nothing that is more vital to people who work for wages than the question of employment and unemployment. I do not know—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Correct, but there is a proper place—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister means some miserable little estimate on winter works that gives a few jobs raking up leaves to a few people.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is all right, there is no item here at all.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I submit that unemployment is a matter directly relevant to labour, and the administration of this department should be concerned with it.

I believe that under The Department of Labour is the proper place to discuss unemployment, and to discuss some of the broad matters that other hon. gentlemen have raised, such as automation that ties into it. Unless I am ruled out of order, I plan to talk about that, too. I do not think we can discuss automation except in the context of unemployment.

There have been suggestions made earlier in this debate that The Department of Labour should be doing something to find work for people who are unemployed in this province. Now, I was just leading up to put in a word in behalf of The Department of Labour. I was going to suggest that I do not think that The Department of Labour of this province should go into competition with the federal government on the matter of trying to find work for people.

I believe that is a legitimate division of function. In any case, speaking for myself—and maybe other hon. members may have had the same experience—in having tried to help unemployed people find work, I can say that I believe that the best facilities in the world are of not much use when there is no work to be found. Facilities are of benefit, but fundamentally the problem is to find work.

Now, I will agree, Mr. Chairman, that at this point we are getting into a pretty wide range of problems beyond the problem of labour. But I would only like to say this, that we will never insure full employment in this country unless we are prepared to undertake some basic economic planning which will, for one thing, insure some control over the amount and direction of investment.

And, until both our provincial and federal governments face up to this problem, we will never have full employment in this country. We might as well face that fact that, either we are prepared to consider solutions that are appropriate to this age, or we will always have unemployment.

Now, there is the further problem of automation about which I regret to say The Department of Labour here, and the government here, and The Department of Labour at Ottawa, and the government at Ottawa, seem to be blissfully unaware. They seem to have no notion that the problem is even developing.

We look at some of the programmes that are being proposed to us in the estimates. They are very worthy programmes. But, by and large, they are very much the same old thing as we had 20 years ago.

We are now living in the 1960's, and it is a very different world from the 1940's or 1950's. A complete revolution is taking place, as far as technology is concerned. It finds itself both in the applications which are now developing of atomic energy and particularly in the field of automation, and I think we should be developing some concrete programmes.

I am not going to berate The Department of Labour of Ontario, I do not think it by itself can handle this tremendous problem. But I think The Department of Labour and the government of Ontario should be putting real pressure on the government at Ottawa to give some leadership in getting co-ordinated and co-operative action to deal with this problem of automation before it becomes really acute.

I submit that will again get us back into the field of economic planning, which I will not go into, since it is well beyond the range of these estimates, I agree. But that is the basic problem. We cannot permit automation to come in, in a totally unplanned way without disastrous effects both for our economy and the people living in it.

But, apart from the problem of overall planning, I submit there are specific measures that should be considered.

I am going to read from one of the recent CCF programmes. The CCF has been attempting to face up to this problem in a variety of ways. There are some suggestions here as to specific measures that should be undertaken, and I think they are worthy of consideration. Some of them—a good many of them—are really within the jurisdiction of a provincial government, and within the authority of The Department of Labour, if the government sees fit to give them the legislation to operate under. I would emphasize again—

Mr. Grossman: The people turned them down, did they not?

Mr. Bryden: The people may have turned them down. I suppose when we were advocating hospital insurance 20 years ago, and were defeated in an election, they could say the people turned that down, too.

Mr. Grossman: They probably did at that time.

Mr. Bryden: So now I am trying to give them another blueprint for the future. I am trying to give some ideas to consider for the future. This particular document is dated January 19, 1958. These proposals, of course, should be taken within the context of my overall remarks, since they are part of a total programme. But here are some of the things I think we should be considering in the way of specific measures: special government research services for the development and application of automation in Canadian industry.

In other words, the government should be looking into this matter, and perhaps bringing it in from a government point of view, rather than running the risk—which is a very grave risk—that the development of automation will take place in the United States and Canadian plants will be shut down.

Automated units, to be efficient, are infinitely larger in many cases than present units. In fact, this is happening in some industries right now. In one plant in the United States, they can produce the total requirements for the continent, so people in Canada could quickly be thrown out of work. Therefore, I think that the government, both federal and provincial, has to give some direct consideration to this matter, and start to devise ways and means of developing automation for ourselves.

Then, dealing with another item which covers a good many sub-items, I suggest we should be considering ways and means of spreading the benefits of automation among all the people, through such measures as the encouragement of guaranteed annual wage agreements; reduction in working hours; increases in pay in accordance to increasing productivity; a vigorous programme for parity in farm income; increased social security; the fullest possible expansion of educational opportunities; and expanded facilities in programmes for the constructive use of leisure time. I think all of those matters are related to this overall problem of automation, and should be getting broader consideration than they are now.

We should also, of course—and this is vital—have special programmes to retrain and relocate displaced workers, and to develop new industries in communities where obsolete plants have been closed.

Taking the first part of that, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to The Department of Labour that what is being done now in the training field under—I believe it is—schedule M of the Dominion-provincial agreement, is really pitifully inadequate, even in regard to the present situation, much less the problems which will develop as automation develops. At any rate, those are some concrete suggestions, rather than just general propositions, as to some of the things that should be considered by this government.

The majority of specific matters I mentioned are within the jurisdiction of this government. These are matters that it should be considering, in co-operation with the federal government, to anticipate the problems that are going to arise as automation develops, and to solve the problems before they result in untold human misery, as they are otherwise bound to do.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one or two comments about the legislation which has been administered by The Department of Labour.

We hear, as we hear on almost everything, how this government is the most advanced in the North American continent, or whatever the area may be, in everything, it does not matter what it is. It is remarkable how they are never second in anything. They are always ahead, according to their own story.

Yet I would like to review one or two of the actual labour standards, or three or four shall I say, of the actual labour standards in effect in this province.

I will not go into The Labour Relations Act because it is the subject of another bill, but I will say a few words about what is usually called the protective legislation, legislation establishing basic standards which will protect all workers, organized or unorganized.

The minimum wage in this province—no, I was going to say in this province but that would not be correct—the minimum wage in the most heavily populated areas of this province is $22 a week for full-time experienced workers of the female sex. It is zero for workers of the male sex. It is lower in other areas of the province, and for workers with lower degrees of experience.

Is $22 a week a leading standard, one to set up to the rest of the North American continent as something they should shoot at—$22 a week for a 48-hour week, less than 50 cents an hour? On statutory holidays there is nothing. There is no guarantee to workers in the year 1960, no guarantee to workers—

Mr. Grossman: Now he is reading my speech.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I happened to be involved 15 years ago in putting in legislative standards establishing by law 8 statutory holidays, so I do not think that I am reading anybody's speech. I can speak with some knowledge of the subject. That was in a province that the hon. gentlemen opposite are always so interested in, the province of Saskatchewan, which for the last 15 years has had legislative provision for 8 statutory holidays with pay, and double time and one-half if one has to work on the holiday.

Mr. Grossman: Why did he leave Shangri-la?

Mr. MacDonald: He came back to dispel some of the darkness in this province.

Mr. Bryden: And I found more than I thought possible.

Mr. Sopha: How did he get unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: How did he get the job to start with?

Mr. Bryden: I realize that the Liberal hon. gentlemen, after they get past their platitudes about labour, when they get down to specific cases, they are really not in favour of this stuff, but I am putting it forward.

I am suggesting that it is unsatisfactory in the province of Ontario to have no provision—no guarantee to—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: How did he get his wife in the civil service?

Hon. Mr. Frost: How did he get his whole family in?

Mr. Bryden:—unorganized workers that they will get statutory holidays, certain recognized ones, there are 8 usually recognized. On vacations our law provides one week's vacation after one year of employment.

Now, I will say to the hon. Minister of Labour, I believe he brought in the bill providing one week's holiday back in 1943 or 1944, and I would say in that day it was a great step forward, and it was the first piece of legislation of its kind in Canada, but that was 16 or 17 years ago. The world has moved along.

I am suggesting to the government that they ought to get up to date on this matter, and that it is quite foolish to say that they are leading the North American continent when they still have that statute of 16 years ago providing merely one week's vacation with pay after one year.

The same is true regarding hours of work—the 48-hour week. That is completely out of date in this day and age.

I am not suggesting that legislation relating to maximum hours of work should be ahead of the field. I believe that the minimum standards we are talking about should tend to consolidate progress that has already been made, but this is hopelessly behind the field. A large percentage of industry now has a 40-hour week, and some of it is moving on beyond that, and here we are still with our 48-hour legislation.

One last point I would like to mention is the problem of employment of older people, people over 40 or even 35 years of age. There are 3 bills on the order paper about this. One was introduced by the hon. member for St. Andrew; one I believe by the hon. member for Hamilton East; and one by one of the hon. gentlemen in the Liberal group, I am not sure which.

Mr. Grossman: That is looking after everybody.

Mr. Sopha: Always ahead.

Mr. Bryden: Well, his was the last on the order paper. Take a look at the order paper. It would indicate some general agreement among the 3 parties on the desirability of having legislation on this subject. If that is so, I would suggest that the government should take over one of these bills—if it likes, the bill of the hon. member for St. Andrew or whatever one is considered the best—and make it a government bill, and do something about this problem. If it is a problem in which the members of the Legislature are leaving the government behind, it is time the government caught up.

Now, I recognize that the fundamental solution to the problem of the employment of older workers is to create full employment. But the fact still remains that legislation of this type will be of some assistance in correcting this very undesirable situation existing now, where men—when they have reached the age of 40 or 45—are apparently considered to be on the scrap heap.

I do not say that bills of the type that are now on the order paper, are the total solution to the problem. But I do believe they would be of considerable assistance in solving this very serious problem, this gross injustice which is being created against men and women who are willing and able to make a real contribution to the productive life of our community.

So I would suggest, here is another area in which the government should consider legislation rather than satisfying itself with self-laudatory remarks about how far ahead it is, when any examination of the records shows that it is bumbling along in the rear of the parade.

Mr. Grossman: Now he stole the speech I was going to make.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to make any general observation, but there are two specific items on the main estimate. Do you want us to proceed now, or are you calling it 1 o'clock?

Mr. Chairman: On vote 901?

Mr. MacDonald: On vote 901, yes.

Mr. Chairman: Two specific items?

Mr. MacDonald: I have no general comments I want to make.

Mr. Chairman: Are they lengthy?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. At least you are not getting them in a minute.

Hon. Mr. Frost: About two minutes?

Mr. MacDonald: No, not in two minutes.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, try it out and let us see what he can do.

Mr. MacDonald: Does he want me to go ahead? Well, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection if you want me to go ahead, but I have two items on workmen's compensation and I have the anti-discrimination part to deal with. And you will not get it in two minutes, I can assure you in advance.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is 1 o'clock, and if he has got by the first paragraph that is some gain.

It being 1 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES,

On vote 901:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, there are two aspects of the operation of the workmen's compensation board on which I would like to make some comments. The first one is by way of a query to the government, to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley). I am informed by the director of welfare of the Ontario federation of labour that a great deal of difficulty is being encountered as a result of 4 words in section 40 of The Workmen's Compensation Act. Section 40 reads as follows:

Where temporary partial disability results from the injury, the compensation shall be a weekly payment of 75 per cent. of the difference between the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident, and the average amount which he is earning or is able to earn in some suitable employment or business after the accident.

Mr. Chairman, the problem here, as I understand it, is that these 4 words, "is able to earn," seem to be opening the door to a completely new interpretation of what has been accepted as the spirit, or the interpretation, of the Act up until now. The ability to earn does not mean the man is actually employed or earning any money.

For example, a miner, after an accident, may have the physical ability to work in an office, but he may be completely unqualified to do so. And these 4 words have been interpreted, on occasion, that his ability to earn is the only factor that could be taken into consideration.

That is one aspect of it, but there is the other aspect of it, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to raise with the hon. Minister. It is this.

My understanding of the compensation has been that it was 75 per cent. of what the person was earning, prior to the accident. Now, if these 4 words are being interpreted so that, in the period of rehabilitation, or of moving back into employment, there is a possibility now, that he is going to get 75 per cent. of only his future capacity to earn, which is lower as a result of the accident.

I ask the hon. Minister whether this is not, in effect, violating what was understood to be the spirit of the Act? My question: Has the department given any consideration to this, and does the hon. Minister believe that it would not be advisable to remove these 4 words which are now creating these difficulties?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Well, that is the first time I have heard of these difficulties, I must say. In all of these years, I think the Act has been administered in the proper, humane way. It is not the intent, nor the purpose, of the board to deprive people of what is justly theirs. But all I can say about that is, are we not becoming a little technical? I will take it up with the board and just see if there is something in it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. Minister, because, quite frankly, I was not aware of it until it was drawn to my attention, and I think it may be a new development as a result of recent interpretations.

A second point that I would like to raise with regard to workmen's compensation is one that, up until now, has normally been considered, either on the committee of agriculture or in the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, and that is the section of the workmen's compensation board which is providing compensation for farmers.

Since the workmen's compensation board comes under the hon. Minister in the actual operations of the board, I think that the time has come when we should take a serious look at the alleged provision of compensation to farmers through the workmen's compensation board.

The basic facts, as I understand them—and as they were given in an up-to-date fashion in the committee just 3 or 4 days ago—are that originally the rates were something less than a dollar, but have risen to $3.50—a rate which, as compared with some industrial rates, is still low. We heard this morning, for example, that in the pulp and paper industry it is $12. Nonetheless, the agriculture rate is regarded as being very high by farmers.

The second basic point—and it seems, Mr. Chairman, that it demolishes the whole feasibility of our present approach—is that some time ago, exactly when I am not certain, there were as many as 3,000 Ontario farmers securing workmen's compensation protection. But the figure has now dropped to less than 1,500. I think that they were guessing in the committee the other day, and thought that it was down to about 1,200 to 1,300.

Mr. Chairman, a plan that this government presents at all seriously, and which is being adopted by only 1,300 farmers in the whole of the province of Ontario, clearly is not a workable plan. Now, it may be, Mr. Chairman, that farmers, if they tried to seek coverage elsewhere, would find that the $3.50 rate is not too high. That may be the case, I am not certain.

But the thing that puzzles me, in that connection, is the revelation, in the committee the other day, that when the co-operative insurance people in Ontario looked into the possibility of providing compensation to farmers, they found that it was away beyond their means, and that they could not handle the thing. But they offered to assist the workmen's compensation board in distributing literature to farmers.

This was a service that they were presumably willing to provide the farmers of the province of Ontario, through their staff across the province. It was not suggested that there was any financial obligation involved in the offer, therefore, it would seem that this would be the kind of thing the workmen's compensation board would have snapped at if they are serious about providing compensation to farmers through the workmen's compensation board.

But a spokesman for the co-operative insurance made the statement that the workmen's compensation board did not want the co-operative insurance people to have anything to do with distributing compensation board literature among farmers.

Now, I come back to my basic contention, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me the government should review this whole situation. There is no point in going on for very much longer, pretending that we are providing compensation to farmers, when fewer than 1,500 farmers in the whole of the province of Ontario are availing themselves of it. Clearly those covered now must be reduced to either those who are very convinced that they must have it for some reason or other, or the accident-prone.

Under that kind of set-up, one cannot run an insurance scheme effectitvely or practically at all. Either there must be some form of subsidy—if it is felt that it is necessary that farmers be offered this—or if we are going to persist with what we now have through the workmen's compensation board, why should the board refuse to accept the offer of assistance from the co-operative insurance people? I wonder if the hon. Minister would have any comments on that.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes, I would like to comment briefly on that.

Of course, everyone knows that farmers are voluntarily accepted for workmen's compensation, and it was, in the beginning, a very low rate, and quite a few—and I think even more than the 3,000 the hon. member said—were covered, but I do know that it has diminished to some considerable extent.

I do not have the actual figures, but I could easily get them.

But the premium or the charge is based entirely on the incidence that occurs within a certain class.

The whole field of compensation is divided into classes. The one mentioned this morning—that of the saw-mill workers—is considered to be very a hazardous class, and through unfortunate experiences their rates have become high. They were up to $14, but they have been trying, and by various means of accident-prevention activities and literature, have succeeded in bringing the rates down to $12.

I cannot understand why the workmen's compensation board would refuse the assistance of distributing literature that might enlighten the farmers and bring them into the sphere of workmen's compensation.

But there is actually nothing that can be done to reduce a rate, one cannot charge some other zone, or some other sphere of activity, more, in order to reduce the farmers' rate. If there was a need for that, I would think it would be on behalf of the lumbermen, that somebody should be paying something to reduce their rate.

But the whole thing is scientifically worked out on the basis of what it costs to administer this class. Unfortunately for the farmers, because there is great mechanism now on farms, the incidence of injury has been so increased that these rate increases were necessary. And, of course, the high rate will make some farmers think: "Well, I do not think I will bother with this." And so they withdraw.

But if we are going to have some sort of a compulsory Act for farmers, we would have to define a farmer. What is a farmer? Is he a man with two acres who works in a factory or—

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): He is a fellow going broke because of that government, that is what a farmer is.

Hon. Mr. Daley: —or whether it is 5 acres or 10 acres or whether he makes his living solely on the farm. I do not know how we would define that, who we would assess.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, surely that is not the basic point—how we would define a farmer.

The hon. Minister says the rate cannot be reduced because it has to be shared within the group. But the rate might conceivably be reduced if the group did not consist of merely 1,200 or 1,300 accident-prone people—if instead we had a few tens of thousands of people in it, so that we would spread the risk over a wider group. Then the hon. Minister might bring his rate down.

But the problem as it appears to me is that we have entered into a vicious circle. The group is getting smaller and smaller, it is quite likely that there are more and more accident-prone people in it, so that the rate is likely going to go up enough. Now, how do we get out of that?

It seems to me we could get out of it in one of two ways. We could make it compulsory, which would raise a whole lot of problems which I am not proposing we consider at the moment. On the other hand, we could advertise this as widely as possible, and here I agree with the hon. Minister in wondering why the workmen's compensation board would refuse the offer of the co-operative insurance people of Ontario, who have contacts and agents throughout the whole farming communities, to do some free advertising.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I will have to check that.

Mr. MacDonald: I would appreciate it if the hon. Minister did, because it has all the earmarks that the board has come to the point where this is a nuisance they would like to get rid of.

Hon. Mr. Daley: No.

Mr. MacDonald: If they are refusing an offer of an organization, with contacts throughout the farming communities, to distribute literature, I do not know how one could come to any other conclusion than that they do not want this to expand. This is looking a gift horse in the mouth, if I ever heard it.

However, if the hon. Minister would look into it, I would appreciate it.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Mr. Chairman, I think probably there is a very simple answer to that question that is bothering the hon. member for York South. There are very few hired help on the farms any more. I think there are only two farmers in my locality who have hired help. Hired help has become very difficult to obtain, and it has got to the place where they only stay a few days, maybe, then leave. Consequently the farmers are just doing without hired help, and doing the work that they themselves can do. I think that just about answers the question.

The farmers all know about this compensation, they know perfectly well it is there to obtain if they want it. But they are not asking for it because they are not using hired help.

Mr. MacDonald: I was under the impression that sometimes it was taken out for the farmer himself as well as for any hired help. I may be in error on this.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): He cannot take it out for himself.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, I am informed that the farmer can take it out for himself, as well as for his hired help. So it seems to me his case does not stand up as strongly as he suggested.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): If I might explain, there is another problem involved here and it has been said that compensation does cover the farmer, it covers his wife, it covers children that are using tractors and all sorts of implements. It covers a 24-hour day operation, and it is entirely different from the risk which is involved in employment in industry.

I think that is one of the main reasons why the compensation rates have been necessarily raised so high, because of the very wide coverage which is included.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, all of these may be very valid reasons, Mr. Chairman. But it seems to me that, if the number of farmers availing themselves of it has now been reduced to 1,200 or 1,300, we might as well throw in the sponge and quit kidding ourselves that compensation is being offered through the board to the farmers of Ontario. I say this because I am certain there are more than 1,200 or 1,300 who would like it.

However, I do not want to thresh through that any longer, Mr. Chairman. The other point I wanted to raise on this main office estimate, Mr. Chairman, is with regard to item No. 10, Ontario's anti-discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, I have raised this before in this House and I do so again. I do not see how we can suggest to the world that we are seriously tackling this problem of anti-discrimination as long as we go on the basis on which we are now operating. This is a vote of $8,000 for a commission which has no full-time personnel.

The personnel of the commission I am told, right now is made up of Mr. Fine, chairman, Messrs. Greenaway and Nutland, with Mr. Eberley as executive secretary of the commission. Now, all of these people are extremely busy people.

In any place where a government has moved seriously, instead of just making a gesture for publicity purposes, toward doing something on anti-discrimination, they have set up a commission which had full-time personnel, and tackled what is ultimately the only answer to discrimination, namely, the educational programme.

Even those of us who have supported the idea that we should have legislation to make it illegal to discriminate against your fellow-man on the basis of race, colour or creed, recognize the fact that the legislation is in effect one-armed in the fight. The other arm has to be education, because we cannot really legislate against discrimination, it is only a lever, or a weapon, or a means of intensifying and assisting the educational programme.

Well, we create this weapon, the one-arm of a commission, but it is a withered arm, because it is not doing a job. It cannot do a proper job if it has not some full-time personnel to pursue this adult educational programme as far as discrimination is concerned.

On another occasion in this House I paid tribute to the press in this province. Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, I say this to the hon. Minister, the press has done infinitely more than his commission has done on the question of discrimination, because the press today—at least I think—is reflecting a growing public conscience on this issue, and if there is a case of discrimination it gets headlines—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr. MacDonald: No, and I repeat, it should get headlines. So it is doing part of the job—I do not think that the hon. Minister can claim that the press should do the job that his commission might lay the whole foundation for.

For example, I understand that in the last year there have been 3 brochures put out. I am a little curious to know, for example, what has been the distribution of those brochures? Why, for example, do they not go to social planning councils, why do they not go to welfare agencies, to bodies who are working in the community, and for whom this would provide some assistance? Even what we are doing is of a very limited and narrow range of distribution.

I am wondering, Mr. Chairman—and if the hon. Minister wants to comment on these—I would just like to put two other suggestions, even in terms of his present programme.

Why is not the hon. Minister willing to move towards the establishment of an advisory committee, made up of representatives of groups in the field, so that he would enlist through his commission the co-operation of many community activities in the spreading of this educational programme?

Why, for example, is not the hon. Minister willing to concede to what has been raised a number of times—the suggestion that a labour-management conference be called to discuss the problems of discrimination in industry? In other words, even if one takes what I suggest is a hopelessly inadequate approach to this—a gesture to this problem—why cannot we have these two other factors in it—a conference of labour-management and an advisory committee involving all the people in the community?

But quite apart from that, I come back to my fundamental point, Mr. Chairman, and that is if the government is going to treat this as anything more than a gesture, it has to establish some full-time personnel who will pursue this, and not leave it as a hobby for 4 or 5 extremely busy people in other phases of the departmental work.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I presume the hon. member for York South wants me to say something about this. I feel very well-satisfied that, in the first place, this government enacted the various discrimination laws regarding employment and—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister voiced his opposition to them before he put them into effect.

Hon. Mr. Daley: —and other laws as they stand which are administered by The Department of Labour.

Now, we moved on gradually and appointed a commission. True, the commission turned out to be the same people who were administering it before a commission was formed, but they have greater powers now, and they have a secretary, and have issued their goodly number of brochures. We have received very many compliments on them, they were very good. A great many people of different races have indicated that they felt that they were good.

We are now working on some more. It is true that these 3 members of the commission are employed in other work as well.

Mr. MacDonald: Is Mr. Eberley employed in other work, too?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh yes, but he is available for all the time that the commission deem it is necessary for him to be with them.

Mr. MacDonald: That would not be very much, because they are all busy elsewhere.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Oh, yes, they are all busy, we all work long hours around here. We have a lot of energy, you know.

Hon. Mr. Daley: But I think that the general result has been very good. I think it is due principally to the fact that our people in Ontario are law-abiding people, and when they know there is a law, why they live up to it. The complaints registered with us are very few.

People are not breaking the law. They are recognizing that there shall be no discrimination because of race, creed, colour or place of origin, and they do not let that interfere with employment or accommodation. Once in a while a case comes up, there may be some difficulty about a mixed couple going into a beverage room or something of the sort. But the general acceptance pleases me, the acceptance of the various laws by the people of Ontario, has been magnificent. I am not just starting out to build up something just for the sake of spending a lot of money.

If we were convinced that we are falling down in some way, it might be different, but I am satisfied that we are not. I am satisfied with these 3 commissioners, and the secretary, and the work they are doing, and I consult with them on many occasions. In fact I do not think we are falling down at all. We could do many things. We could have many advisers advising us as in the United States. I know there are state commissions over there that spend their time going out and digging or trying to find something that is wrong. They go to an employer where he may not have any coloured people in his plant, and they say, "Why have you not? There must be some reason why you have not. You must be discriminating, you must be doing this." Maybe nobody of a different colour or race ever appeared at the man's plant when he needed somebody.

I do not think it is our business to do that. We have the place where they can come, and we have a formal procedure whereby they can make their presentation. If we receive a complaint we immediately go to work on it. If it is at the head of the lakes, we have the thing looked into the next day. Our methods are quick and sure and are working very satisfactorily.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I just want to make this final comment, if I may, and then the hon. Prime Minister can, if he wishes, take over on it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I just want to make one suggestion on that and say this:

In connection with that commission, we have been giving consideration to the change of the name from the Ontario anti-discrimination commission to something after the order of the Ontario human rights commission.

The reason for that is: I think perhaps anti-discrimination is rather a negative name. It is something like the word "tolerance." Now, in my youth, I remember very well the use of the words "tolerance" and "tolerant." Actually speaking, that word has gone out of vogue in very many ways, in the sense that it is used because it means to tolerate or to put up with.

Now, I think that we might give consideration to the finding of a better name for that and perhaps the legislation that it governs. However, that is just a matter of interest at the moment.

Mr. MacDonald: I am very glad that I listened to the hon. Prime Minister's comments before I made my final observation. If the only progress that the government has in mind is to change the name of this committee, he is underlining the case I am making. Whether we call it an anti-discrimination committee or whether we call it a human rights committee, so far, all it has done is to put out a few brochures.

It would be very appropriate, Mr. Chairman, that we should call it a human rights committee because I suggest to the hon. members that the organization which is doing far more in this field than the government's commission is the human rights committee of the Ontario federation of labour. The hon. Minister of Labour says, for example, that there are only a few instances of discrimination brought to his attention. The overwhelming majority of instances are dug out by the human rights committee of the federation of labour.

We have an interesting contrast in the whole approach of this government and labour here. With the government it makes a gesture, it pays lip-service, and then it sits in its seats and does nothing about them. Whereas, in the instance of the Ontario federation of labour, they have a committee which is going out, it is doing educational work among its own people, it is doing educational work in the community at large, and if they hear of a case of discrimination it is they who go out and get the information for this committee.

In fact, right in the hon. Minister's own city, there was a case alleging that the people along the street did not want a Negro couple living on their street. So what did the officials of the human rights committee do? They went in and were able to get a petition signed by everybody up and down the street that they had no objection to these people.

This is the kind of job the government should be doing. This is the kind of job its commission should be doing. I suggest to the government that if it is not going to do anything more, it should make a grant available, and give it to the human rights committee on the Ontario federation of labour which is doing a job in this field.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): The hon. member knows they complemented the government.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not complementary. They are the operative portions of their commission.

Vote 901 agreed to.

On vote 902:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): I would like to say a few words in connection with this commission, which I understand now is going to be the human rights commission.

I think one of the things your commission should be thinking about is what are the types of people who might receive discrimination, and then try to think of a media by which we can inform such people about the law, and the ways by which they can come for governmental protection against some discriminatory action.

That brings up the point that when we are putting out these free pamphlets, we should consider putting them out in a variety of languages, and using the means of ethnic newspapers and ethnic organizations. Then new people with accents, and with different languages, will be able to learn of the protection they have when they come to Ontario.

I agree thoroughly with the point that there is not enough done by this commission to tell people of the existing law, and to educate them in ways that they can get protection and help by the government.

I think that we should have, for example, some educational films. If we look at the federal Department of Labour we will find that they have films which are going out to home and school and to other organizations.

I think, as well, that the Ontario human rights commission could benefit from the advice, on this work, of voluntary organizations such as the organization that the hon. Prime Minister was commending so well about a week ago. I am speaking about the council of Christians and Jews. I think they could help this commission in setting up conferences with home and school organizations and a great number of others.

I think that there is a problem in connection with discrimination. I think that the human rights committee of the unions have shown that, right in this city, in connection with apartments, that people, because of colour, are not being able to rent apartments. I think that there is a lack of knowledge by the people of their rights, and I think it is the commission's job to be doing something about it. The commission should disseminate knowledge of rights and procedure to obtain rights as well as developing the whole broad educational field.

I am quite sure we in the Liberal party have always stood for equality of race, we have always encouraged people of many colours and backgrounds to come to this country, and we feel that in this situation there should be much more done by the Ontario government to integrate them.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chairman—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: I am waiting until the hon. member for York South gets finished, so I may take part in this debate, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: This is not a debate, it is the consideration of the estimates.

Mr. Troy: I believe I have something to say generally, as the others have.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 901?

Mr. Troy: Yes, it is as pertinent as many of the arguments I have heard today, Mr. Chairman, and I heartily endorse the principles of my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) in regard to what he has enunciated today.

I also agree with the echoes of our policies as the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) was speaking.

The hon. Prime Minister has said there will be a discussion on unemployment in The Department of Municipal Affairs, but I certainly think it should be discussed also generally before that particular debate comes up. I have heard very frequently, since I have come here the last few short weeks, how wonderful the government is, of which you are a member, Mr. Chairman.

My riding, which was born of the transportation industry, now is suffering the effects of automation, and this forward-looking government has done very little about the replacement of a great number of railroad men who are now out of employment. If they had put in, years ago, some system of portable pensions, so that these men would be able now to seek employment in other places—

Hon. Mr. Frost: This has nothing whatever to do with the estimates. The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Troy: Well, I shall speak about discrimination and anti-discrimination and bring it up that way.

There is a discrimination, as we heard, about race, colour and creed and such discrimination—

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest the hon. member for Nipissing is out of order. He is not speaking on this vote.

Mr. Troy: You permitted—Mr. Chairman, with all due respects, you permitted—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: I am speaking about the fourth discrimination, the discrimination of age. I know young men who served their country—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Troy: Well, you allowed, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is a bill on the order paper about that—

Mr. Troy: There is anti-discrimination of age. I know young men in my own riding who were employees of the railroads, and now they are out of jobs. When they seek jobs in other industries, they are told they are too old. And what will they do? Are they going to go on relief, or receive unemployment insurance for a short time, then face the problem of what they are to do?

I certainly think that, if this government is the forward government it says it is and has been, something should have been done long ago about that.

The hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) mentioned earlier about the coming of the Holy Spirit. It is too bad that the government has not felt the effects of the Holy Spirit, and possibly then there would have been more moral principles in their legislation than there are now.

Mr. Crossman: That is pretty low, bringing religion into this thing.

Vote 902 agreed to.

On vote 903:

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Does the licencing of automobile mechanics come under this vote 903? I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there has been an increase from $1 to $5 for a licence for mechanics, now. Are they going to get increased protection for that extra money? Increased protection? More inspectors?

I know that I have had garage operators tell me that there are service stations which are doing mechanical operations on automobiles, such as brake lining and so on, that have no certificates. There have been no inspections, and one garage operator I know has never seen an inspector.

Now, I will just read a letter to the paper here in connection with that:

While holidaying in the Barrie area, my car developed trouble in the generating system. I took it to an establishment which was experienced in this type of work. The mechanic who took a look at it said the generator was burned out. So it was necessary to replace it.

Fifteen miles after leaving Barrie, I smelled smoke, found it was the generator, so returned to the garage. There the generator was again replaced, as well as a piece of equipment called a regulator which should have been replaced the first time.

Now here it is:

While waiting for my car, I spoke to another mechanic there, and he told me that the man who was working on my car was not licenced, and another mechanic who had been there over 20 years had never been licenced. He also stated that, in all that time, there had never been an inspector come in from The Department of Labour.

I am hoping that this extra $4, that these men are being asked to pay, will give them extra protection because, according to what I read there, they need it, because of what I told hon. members previously is happening in this business. Men are not being protected when they should be.

Hon. Mr. Daley: In an industry like that, where there are thousands and thousands of them, it is true that the odd one may get by without being detected. But our efforts, of course, were greatly limited with a fee of $1. We could not write letters for that. But we do hope to do more with the fee now of $5, which is realistic—it is not a high fee—it is a sensible fee, and should have gone up years ago. We hope to be able to give better administration and better protection for the industry. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. Gordon: Unless these regulations are enforced, there is no use in having them. It is of no use to put these regulations on the books for a man to be licenced, and legislate that he shall pay so much, if there is no enforcement of it, no policing on it. It becomes of no use.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, further in regard to apprenticeship. I know in northern Ontario we have had an inspector there for some time. But I believe he is to be taken out, and that the north is to be serviced from the city here. And one of the arguments, I believe, that was advanced when the fee was increased, was that there would be further inspection of the apprentices, and I understand now that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction that the inspector is to be taken out of North Bay and that the north will be serviced from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Elliot Lake. I never heard of it.

Mr. Troy: Well, if that is all he can offer Elliot Lake, then I regret the hon. Prime Minister made that statement.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is all there is, that is all.

Mr. Troy: Further, in regard to apprenticeship training, the problem, at the present time, is that a young man has to be in industry before he can go into our trades institutes. I mentioned this before, and I will say more about these trades schools in the estimates on The Department of Education.

A problem that I know is very definite in northern Ontario, particularly among the Indian placement officers, is the putting in of young Indians in industry. There are no schools in which they can learn a trade, or the rudiments of a trade, so that they can get employment. And it has reached the stage now where the placement officers who I know, in the Indian affairs branch, have to seek the possibility of placing young Indians in the Manitoba school of trade. I think there should be some definite consideration, not only by the department of the hon. Minister, indeed I think possibly that there should be a department of trade in addition.

Vote 903 agreed to.

On vote 904:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. Why is not the apprenticeship branch here connected with The Department of Education? This happens to be an educational programme.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We would have a rebellion on the part of labour and management.

Mr. Newman: All right then.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member had better leave that alone, that is not popular.

Mr. Newman: Is there any liaison between this apprenticeship training in The Department of Labour and the technical training in The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Daley: The Department of Education actually runs the school for us.

Vote 904 agreed to.

On vote 905:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Could I ask for some information? I suppose my question relates to some other of the branches, too, but with regard to vote 905, does that cover only the head office expenditures for factory inspection? With the actual cost of inspections being covered under vote 908, the composite inspection branch, could the hon. Minister just explain how the expenditures are divided up here?

Hon. Mr. Daley: This factory inspection is for the engineering service, and for other things in connection with the examination of buildings, and plans—

Mr. Bryden: The examination of plans, but actually factory inspection comes under the composite inspection branch.

Hon. Mr. Daley: That is right.

Vote 905 agreed to.

On vote 906:

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, on vote 906, I would like to ask the reason for the increase in the licence fees in the past year. I understand the operators' fees, both in the stationary group and the hoisting groups, have been increased about 150 per cent., from $2 to $5. What was the need for this increase in this group that are just working on an hourly basis?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Does the hon. member want a simple answer? To get more money, to do more work for the very same people.

Vote 906 agreed to.

On vote 907:

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, with regard to vote 907, I would like a word of information as to the type of work that the minimum wage branch does. Is it investigating those people who are paying salaries below the minimum wage, or is there such a clause as that at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Daley: All that type of thing, checking and recovering, often for people who have been underpaid—all that type of work in connection with the minimum wage.

Mr. Belanger: Well, for the amount of money that we are spending on that category, I believe, from my way of looking at it, that there are places, hundreds of places throughout the province, where they are not sticking to the minimum wage.

Hon. Mr. Daley: There is another one—the industry and labour board, some of the expense of that is in there.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, concerning the matter of protecting young people under 14 years of age, who are working, would this come under this minimum wage?

Could the hon. Minister tell me how many young people, during the past year, were discovered to be working, and were under 14 years of age?

Hon. Mr. Daley: I have no knowledge. It has never been reported to me.

Mr. Thompson: I see. What I am trying to get at is in connection with bowling alleys and newspaper work. Are there any areas where young people are under 14? Does that cover everything, that there are no young persons under 14 allowed to work? Or can a young person do after-school work and get paid for it?

Mr. Grossman: Are there girls setting up pins—are there females setting up pins in the bowling alleys?

An hon. member: Sure they do. Yes they do.

Hon. Mr. Daley: We do not permit them in bowling alleys. But it is true that there are certain types of work that, of necessity, may force these young people to assist their mother who might be a widow, and one thing or another. We have to be a little flexible in this matter, concerning newspaper delivery and things like that.

Mr. Thompson: The point I just want to make, Mr. Chairman, is this, I think that, in his flexibility in letting the young person work, that he could perhaps be more flexible in connection with relief and other aspects, which no doubt come under his department.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us how many cases of infringement of The Minimum Wage Act were brought to his attention last year.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Within the next few days, I am advised, our annual report will be filed, and all the information will be in it on this question.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he is thinking of extending this Act to male, as well as female, persons.

Hon. Mr. Daley: No.

Vote 907 agreed to.

On vote 908:

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): On vote 908, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, in answering the hon. member for Brantford in connection with the 500 per cent. increase in the mechanic's licence, said that he was taking more money so he could provide more inspection. Now he is taking a 500 per cent. increase in the licence fee and the salaries of the inspectors are increasing a third of one per cent. Would the hon. Minister tell us what additional inspection services he is providing?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Sure, we cannot spend the money until we get it. This is just new legislation. We have had to get some money in before we can do these things. It is our hope to improve the service and the inspection and to do a better job.

Mr. Singer: But surely, Mr. Chairman, it requires no mathematical genius to anticipate that, if we are getting $1 for a number of mechanics, and we are going to get $5, we just multiply the total by 5, so that we must be getting 5 times as much as we got before. Theoretically, the hon. Minister should be giving 5 times additional inspection, but he is only giving a third of one per cent. in the whole increase, in the total inspectorial staff. I want to know what additional service the hon. Minister is going to give.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, perhaps we only got half as much as we should have before. So multiply that one out. Figure that one tonight.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, first of all, how many inspectors are employed in the composite inspection work and essentially what their work is. That is, I would like to know if some of them specialize in different types of inspection. I would like to know how many there are specializing in the various phases.

Hon. Mr. Daley: About 70, I am advised.

Mr. Bryden: About 70. Now, what is the nature of their work?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, composite inspectors, of course, go into industry and inspect almost anything in there. Regarding boilers, we have special boiler inspectors who go around, and foundry inspectors who just inspect foundries.

Mr. Bryden: Yes. Well, what about factory inspection, safety inspection?

Hon. Mr. Daley: They are actually composite and—

Mr. Bryden: All of the 70 might do some safety inspection?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: But they would do other inspection work as well. These are men specializing in foundries, of course—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh, yes.

Mr. Bryden: But would the safety inspectors do boiler inspection as well?

Hon. Mr. Daley: No. They might simply report that they were in the boiler room and there was no certificate in there, which would draw to the attention of the boiler people that there might be a violation of The Operating Engineers Act and things like that. But they do not attempt to inspect boilers.

Mr. Bryden: How many inspections did these inspectors in the composite inspection branch do in the most recent year for which the hon. Minister has figures? I have a report here for the period ending March 31, 1958—I somehow feel there must be a later one—but this one showed something like 50,000 factory inspections that year. Would that be—

Hon. Mr. Daley: I think there would be about 55,000 this last year.

Mr. Bryden: There were 55,000 by 70 men. Does the hon. Minister feel that staff is adequate to do an effective job?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I think I would be safe in saying that industry appreciates the inspection service today more than it ever has in the history of this province, because of the type of people we have been able to develop, and the way they carry on their work.

The regulations are laid down for them. In some inspection jobs, of course, for instance, there might be a little place where there is only one man working, and this would not take very long. Another one may be a great industry, but—

Mr. Gisborn: Would it take two weeks?

Hon. Mr. Daley: It might, it might. It would take a long time. We constantly watch this, and we make zones for one or two men to take care of that area, and, as the work increases, if there happens to be an influx of industry into an area, why we break up the zone again, and make changes—and I think we keep pretty well on top.

I have never refused inspection service. If the chief factory inspector wanted more help for another zone, we would go over if I agree with him. We have never been limited in putting people on. But we do not want to have a surplus of them running around doing nothing. I think our men are pretty busy, and doing a pretty fair job.

Mr. Bryden: How many of the 55,000 inspections would be made as the result of complaints lodged as to conditions dangerous to safety or health?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I think it would be very few, very few.

Mr. Bryden: There are one or two points I would like to make here, Mr. Chairman. I know this is an old argument, and I suppose we will never get it fully resolved.

At least I am happy that, in this matter of safety inspection, the hon. Minister does not take the position he takes with regard to human rights, where he acts only on the basis of complaints. I believe that, of the 55,000 inspections, there would probably be only 200 or 300 made on complaints, and he would not have much of a branch if he relied on complaints.

He does, indeed, as a normal rule, send out people inspecting conditions to see that they measure up to standards.

I suggest to him, though—and I think this applies to more branches of his department than just this particular branch—that The Department of Labour, in an industrial province like Ontario, is really very starved for services.

A budget of $3 million for the year for all the important work it has to carry on is, I would submit, less than adequate, and I believe that 55,000 inspections—recognizing the hon. Minister's point that some of them are fairly small inspections, but recognizing also that when we get inspecting a place like the Steel Company of Canada it is a very large inspection—that 70 men doing 55,000 inspections does not indicate an adequate staff.

There is one other matter that I would like to call to the attention of the hon. Minister. I have no doubt he is familiar with this particular case, but it is one I noticed in the Toronto Globe and Mail of October 22, 1959. It is a Canadian Press dispatch from Welland dated October 21:

A court was informed today that officials of the B. F. Goodrich (Canada) Limited plant here were told, prior to the death of one of the firm's workers, about safety regulations governing the entry of persons to confined areas where gases were likely to be present.

Robert Greenop, inspector with the provincial Department of Labour, was testifying at the trial of the company on a charge of causing the death of Earl K. Strawn through criminal negligence. Mr. Strawn was overcome in a gas-filled pit January 8, and failed to respond to artificial respiration.

Mr. Greenop said he had visited the plant on several occasions, and had drawn to the attention of manager Harold Petch the provisions of section 54 of The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act.

When I saw that, I felt that there may be danger that the department, in some cases, is not tough enough.

I quite realize that, if we are going to do useful factory inspection work, an inspector cannot be forever throwing his weight around. He has to get the co-operation of the manufacturer or the people who are running the plant. With that I would agree.

But, on the other hand, I think there do come times when he has to step in and get tough.

Here was a case where, according to the evidence Mr. Greenop was reported to have given, he had on several occasions drawn to the attention of the plant manager a violation of the law. Yet, as far as I could see from the story—of course, maybe the story is not complete—there was no action taken in court against this company until a man was killed. That is a rather unfortunate time to have to take legal action.

I call this to the attention of the hon. Minister to inquire if there may not be some cases where, perhaps, the inspector should get a little tougher than he did in this case. I think also that, if there were a few more inspectors so each one did not have such a big load, they might be able to give a little more attention to such matters.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I would only say, in that regard, that I think on occasion we are tough enough. Actually, it has been my feeling that we can accomplish more in the interests of the worker in developing safe methods and better ventilation, and the many things that we are charged with the responsibility of looking after, by getting the co-operation of the management.

Rightly or wrongly, I have definitely laid it down to our people that I do not want them to say, "I am a government man and I am demanding this." I tell them I want them to go in there and speak to these people as decent, honest people, and say, "This is what the law requires that you do. Now, let us see how well we can get it done," and so on, rather than using the official certificate that they have as a club.

I think, when I said that I believe we have better co-operation in industry than we have ever had before, that can be proved by the fact that we have now more and more industries seeking the assistance of our people. It might be that the inspectors are not due to come around for some time, yet we have lots of applications for them to come especially and have a look at what the companies are doing.

I think the department has, over the years, gradually improved its prestige, and I still think we can get more done by endeavouring to co-operate and being reasonable than we can by—

Mr. Bryden: I would just like to indicate again, Mr. Chairman, that, in what I already said, I recognized the point the hon. Minister is making. But I would still call to his attention that here was a case of a man who was killed because of a situation that was permitted to exist in direct violation of the law, and about which the employer was warned on several occasions.

I think that is where co-operation should cease, especially when it is a very dangerous condition as this one obviously was, when it led to the death of a man. I think that there is a case where, after a couple of warnings, we have got to crack the whip, and point out that either he must fix it up or else he will go into court.

Hon. Mr. Daley: We do in many cases.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I feel that since the matter of The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act has been mentioned here, now is the time to say I was very delighted to hear the hon. Minister of Labour make some remarks with respect to the efforts which are made by his department to get individuals to co-operate.

I have a matter which I would like to bring to his attention, since it seems to me that this Act governs just about everything from conditions in restaurants and rest-rooms to offices.

I would like to bring to his attention a situation which exists in this building, where hon. members of this Legislature are very cramped, for instance, in the restaurant where we are asked to eat our meals, where space of 25 chairs or 40 chairs is provided for some 98 members of this Legislature.

It seems to me that he might also give some consideration, if it is in his department—he might even be able to get the hon. Prime Minister to co-operate with him—to provide some facilities for the hon. members. In most cases, in between sessions, there is not even a chair or a desk for him to sit down to, and unless they sit in some public room it is not possible.

I just throw that in for what it is worth, Mr. Chairman. I think since he is working in a co-operative manner, he might do a little investigation around this building.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister how much money was given to the accident prevention association last year.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I do not have that. That would be in the annual statement, would it not? I think that is in the annual statement with the workmen's compensation board.

Mr. Gisborn: I imagine it would be, but with the multitude of reports we get, I just have not had time to go through it that far.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I do not have it here, but it could easily be obtained.

Mr. Gisborn: If the hon. Minister cannot answer, I will check it in the report.

I would like to say this, that it is a fact that the Ontario federation of labour have asked for years for representation on the accident prevention association.

Now, there is no one who can deny that the federation is one of the groups that are highly interested in safety and accident prevention in the industries in this province.

As the hon. Minister knows, they did produce a very good document, a result of a survey they took right across this province, which is one of the best, I believe, that I have ever read. It covers all phases of industrial health and safety.

Certainly, if we are going to give money to industry to take an interest and promote accident prevention, this group should be entitled to some representation, and some funds with which to carry out a particular phase of that job. I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment on that.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I am sure the hon. member knows that, when he says "We are going to give money to industry," that it is industry's money. Industry put it in there in the first place.

Mr. Bryden: Well, it is public money that is in there.

Mr. Gisborn: Apart from the fund.

Mr. Bryden: The fund is there for the workers.

Mr. Gisborn: Is that the system? They give the government some money to carry out a function, and the government is going to give it back to them? This is an important function, and I think we are taking the wrong plan. This group, the accident prevention association, have conventions. I have been to them. In some sense the conventions might be useful; some of the workers in the plants go to the conventions. But I feel that, in some cases, these men are somewhat deterred by the procedure in getting their point across. Let the Ontario federation of labour have an amount of money, and let them have representation in the association, so that they can really do the job that they feel they can do.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I would just like to say finally, in regard to this accident prevention, of course, there has always been a great bone of contention. It is a difficult thing, using certain methods in procedure. We have always been searching for something better.

I have had meetings set up to meet that group of which the hon. member speaks.

Unfortunately, we set a date and I could not be there because of something intervening and then, the next day, we made another date. Doug Hamilton of the Ontario federation of labour—secretary-treasurer, I believe—was bringing the group, and they could not come, and a second time they could not come. So I mean it is in the picture to meet with these people, but we just have not been able to arrange it, as yet.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this matter, I would like to take exception to the suggestion, sometimes made, that money that is in the accident fund is employers' money, which it certainly is not. It is a fund set up for the protection of working people, and employers—in consideration of having paid it in—are relieved of the liability they would otherwise have, under the common law, for suit because of accidents arising on their premises. It is wrong to say that money collected by assessment is their money. It has become public money, it is there for the benefit of working people.

Therefore, it seems to me that, in the important matter of accident prevention, the representatives of working people should be involved in it.

Vote 908 agreed to.

On vote 909:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, returning to vote 908, under the composite inspection branch, does that refer to inspection of only the physical aspects of the premises? Is that it, or are—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Machinery and everything, ventilation, fire hazards, everything that has to do with an industry. Good housekeeping or bad housekeeping. Everything.

Mr. Newman: Does it include the safety rules of the worker, too?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes, it might.

Mr. Newman: It has nothing to do whatsoever with the qualifications of the employees?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh, no.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Daley: He is not finished speaking yet.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how many languages are spoken by the various employees in the department in their duties.

Hon. Mr. Daley: These safety men?

Mr. Newman: These safety men. Are they able to converse with the various people employed in these factories?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I would say, outside of being bilingual in the Ottawa district and in the north, why I do not know of anyone who speaks any other language.

Mr. Newman: How would certain ethnic groups know about these safety procedures if there was no one to explain it to them in their own language?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh, that is a good question.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, this is quite important, with the great influx of Europeans, these people are at a distinct disadvantage, and we are interested in their safety. What is the hon. Minister doing about this?

Hon. Mr. Daley: I am not doing anything about trying to have somebody for every language that might be here, 40 or 50 people being able to speak different languages. All the literature of accident prevention is posted in the buildings, and I am quite sure the people who come here are quite intelligent, and it takes them no time to see and get the feel of accident prevention—

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would it not be good, on the part of the department, to have someone fluent in the language of, say the construction trades, where we run into the one strong national group, primarily participating in that trade, to be able to converse with the employees?

Hon. Mr. Daley: There would not be anything wrong with it, I will agree with the hon. member on that.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, how many accidents have happened to one national group as a result of their inability to learn these safety rules? Is there any study on this?

Hon. Mr. Daley: No.

Mr. Newman: Thank you.

Vote 909 agreed to.

On vote 910:

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I notice here on vote 910, the office of the athletic commissioner. Years ago we had a very fine athletic commission in the days when the late lamented Jimmy Fitzgerald was the secretary. I see here, assistance to amateur sport, and I notice the $26,000. I realize this is a very piddly sum because outside the schools, there is very little amateur sport, due to the clutches of our professional hockey league, our professional Big 4 and those football unions.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Did he say a piddly sum?

An hon. member: And down $5,000, too.

Mr. Troy: The point is that it says assistance to amateur sport. Now, what assistance do we get? I never heard of it, and I have been in the field of amateur sport for more than 20 years, both as a player and a coach, and I would like to know.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): He has been missing a lot.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Surely the hon. member must have heard that the office of the commissioner distributes playing equipment to midgets and minors.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister means little ones?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Sure. If in his town somebody up there is willing to promote a little league of small kids, he can get assistance from the commissioner.

Mr. Troy: Thank you. What amount? Is there a ceiling on the amount? I ask because I know, in the organization of which I am a member—a veterans' organization—that we have a very fine community programme in sport, so we can draw on that fund.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes, if somebody will be responsible for the equipment we send up. We have to have somebody sign for it.

Mr. Troy: Being a veterans' organization, there will be certainly somebody responsible.

Hon. Mr. Daley: That is right. We will assist them, but we may not give them all they ask for because our funds are very limited.

Mr. Troy: I know. It is the policy of the government not to give.

Hon. Mr. Daley: In hockey and in baseball, we try to give according to the number of teams. The equipment includes a few catchers' outfits because they are expensive, and goaltenders' outfits in hockey, and some sticks and some pucks, and baseballs. But we cannot supply the whole thing, it runs into a lot of money. But we want the local people to maintain some interest in these, and usually the junior clubs get some assistance. But we want to help, too, and we have issued many thousands of pieces of equipment over the years.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, referring back to this assistance to amateur sports, who decides the amount that is to be received by the individual organization?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, we have a commissioner there, a man who has been in sports all his life and was a great athlete. When we get a request, he will decide on the amount.

Now, suppose they are going to have 100 players in that league. He might decide that we would give these people 50 hockey sticks, if it was hockey, we may give them half. Also, we may give them something they did not ask for, a hockey goaltender's outfit. The commissioner brings his decision to me for approval, and I may say that I approve of every bit of material that goes out of there. I think I should, in order to have a check on it.

Mr. Newman: What athletic activities are covered in this?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Any kind.

Mr. Newman: The amount is $26,700. To what extent does the hon. Minister expect to be able to spread $26,700? After all, will this be made known to the public?

Having been connected with amateur sports for well over 25 years, I never heard of this until this year.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I do not know where the hon. member has been. We have been doing this for 5 years.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, why is this hidden?

Some Conservative hon. members: Shame, shame.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Every year I have brought it up.

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister can say what he wishes. I was connected with the amateur athletic union for well over 10 years and I never heard of it, even through them. What steps are taken by the government to advertise this?

Now, this is important because there are hundreds of organizations that would like very much to have assistance from the government, other than the few that are being helped today.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I would just like to say that this year our estimates increased to $39,000.

Mr. Newman: Are principals of various schools notified? Are community service organizations notified?

Hon. Mr. Daley: They can find out.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, this is less than one-third of a cent per capita for the province of Ontario. The government has just proposed a fitness programme, allotting one-third of a cent to make Ontario fit. They should have their heads bowed in shame.

If they are so proud of their fitness programme in the province, why do they hide this? Why is it not advertised, and why is it not known to all the communities? There are kids that have to turn around and scrimp and scrape to get 10 and 15 cents to buy some minor piece of sport equipment, yet the government has, so they claim, $26,700, yet that youngster cannot find out about it. It is never advertised anywhere.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I do not know where the hon. member has been.

Mr. Newman: This is a mere pittance. It is not even a pittance. When we turn around and look at countries that are not "Onward Ontario," such as this one is, we find they will not turn around and contribute not 1, not 10, but 100 times the amount that this so-called "Forward Ontario" province is doing, I think that this province should hang its head in shame.

Mr. Lavergne: Well, that was part of his speech the other night.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I am not through. This happens to be an Olympic year, and where are we going to come along and display our athletes—athletes that we are supposed to take so much pride over? We just had Barbara Wagner and Bob Paul win the Olympic championship. How proud we were. We were going to invite them into the Legislature.

How about the hundreds and thousands of other athletes who have not had that opportunity? Why is that opportunity not made available to them? The only way the amateur athlete can get money is, he has to come here with a tin cup, so to speak, to get it. He has to make a personal appeal. We look back in there, and we see organizations coming along and getting $2,500, and a poor little club in some small town has to beg, or have its MPP write to get a $50 grant.

An hon. member: Why did the hon. member not write?

Mr. Newman: Why did I not write? I could raise funds when I needed funds. I will have organizations write, the hon. Minister can be sure of that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I rise to reiterate the statements of my hon. colleague. I think that this amount of money which has been delegated to amateur sports in this province is a disgrace to the government opposite. I think they ought to be ashamed of themselves. I think they ought to hang their heads in shame, when they stand up and tell the people of this province that they are giving assistance to amateur sports, and then put a measly $25,000 in a budget of $1 billion. Why, that is nothing short of a disgrace.

Mr. Chairman: Carried.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Carried, nothing!

On top of that, Mr. Chairman, the government collects literally thousands of dollars from entertainment tax from professional sports, and then it is necessary for us to go across the line and bring professional football players, and the like, over here to entertain Canadians.

Now, it is a known fact, Mr. Chairman, that to get professional athletes we must have amateurs. That is where they are developed. So I think that the policy of the government in allotting this pittance to amateur sports is one of the disgraces of the government of the day.

Now, the question of publicizing this matter has been brought up, and it appears that the government does not wish to do anything about it. Yet there are other departments of this government which spend literally thousands of dollars for that very purpose. I would point out, for instance, the very elaborate invitations which were put out by the Hydro department to notify the public that they had changed their office. I am sure they must be proud of this type of waste and extravagance of the government.

Yet here is something that is worthy, so worthy that Prince Philip comes across and makes speeches about physical fitness. The government indicates a desire to promote physical fitness in the country, yet here is a place where they could really do something, and they allot $25,000 to amateur sports.

I think this is one of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, why the government is able to balance its budget. They cut down where the money is needed, and then come up and tell us that they are showing a surplus.

I suggest that the hon. Minister of Labour, or whoever is responsible, take a good firm look at this, and perhaps do something a little more realistic when they bring down the figure again.

Mr. Lavergne: Mr. Chairman, I must say this: There was a nerve-shattering statement from across there. Here are those hon. members who stand on their feet and say they admit—

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Tell them what you think.

Mr. Lavergne: —that they did not know that the government was providing $39,000 this year—

Mr. MacDonald: Publicized in the Tory machine.

Mr. Lavergne: —they said they did not know. They were not arguing that there had not been any, but now that they discover $39,000 they say it is not enough. That to me is as foolish as anything I have heard from across there.

Mr. Chairman, if we have to sit here and listen to that, then it is terrible. I would give just a word of advice to their hon. leader—he should get them lined up.

I will say this though, that at least they have one hon. member in the back who has agreed that we have balanced the budget, although he is not agreeing with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would like some clarification from the hon. Minister as to how he arrives at $39,000. The estimates here say $26,700, which are some $5,000 less than they were last year, and the hon. Minister says he is really going to spend $39,000.

Now, he is going to spend $5,000 less than last year but it is going to add up to $8,000 more. How does he do it?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, last year we had a Treasury order to increase the amount. I mean we ran over our budget. You see, we are called upon to give $10,000 to the Olympic games. In addition to this—

Mr. Newman: Is that all?

Hon. Mr. Daley: —we gave $2,500 to the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen.

Mr. Newman: How about the skiers? What did they give?

Mr. Singer: How much did they give?

Hon. Mr. Daley: And then, of course, in addition to all this, look what The Department of Education does in the summer.

Mr. Newman: What did they give to the figure skaters?

Hon. Mr. Daley: This is something that a few years ago was not done at all. It is something that came entirely from this government to help these youngsters play instead of—

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to get this quite straight. Is the hon. Minister telling us that what he has here before us in estimates is not the amount of money he is going to spend; that, in fact, he is going to spend a substantial amount more? The figure here is $26,700. Is he telling us now that, notwithstanding the estimate here, this really is no indication of what he is going to spend, that he is going to spend another $12,000?

Hon. Mr. Daley: That is what we hope to spend. But if unusual things come up and we have to help out—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The MacFarlands and the Dutchmen or somebody else.

Hon. Mr. Daley: —why then, if we have not got enough money we go to the Treasury.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is far more important than just an interchange of just a few thousand dollars in a particular estimate. I think there is a very substantial principle involved here. If the hon. Minister feels, as apparently he does, that he has been telling the committee this afternoon that he has not got enough money in his estimates, why does not the hon. Minister have the courage to bring in proper estimates, which will properly reflect what he is going to spend?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, may I ask my hon. friend how, last year at this time, would we know of the famous Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen? We could not know—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, that is not the point at all. This is the estimate for 1960-1961. The hon. Minister has told us he is not going to spend $26,700, he is going to spend $39,000.

Hon. Mr. Daley: We spent that. That is what was spent last year.

Mr. Singer: Well, what is he going to spend this year?

Hon. Mr. Daley: $26,000.

Mr. Singer: Well, all right. Now that we have that one clear, Mr. Chairman, can the hon. Minister tell us why his estimates are $5,000 lower this year than they were last year?

Hon. Mr. Daley: No Olympics—

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I would just like to say something on this. The reason why the hon. Minister cannot specify the exact amount that the department will spend this year is because all these requests from the other side are going to start coming in, and we will need more money, now that they have found out it is available. There is the answer just as simple as could be.

Mr. Singer: Isn't that good!

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an observation, but by way of preface, I should like to tell our hon. friends opposite that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville on one occasion raised funds to take our athletes to the Soviet Union, and on another occasion he helped raise funds to take our athletes to Australia.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): We did not need any government money.

Mr. Sopha: All right, just a moment, regarding the hon. member's store of information over there. Will he please just listen for another minute? So when the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville speaks on this, we are listening to a man who knows whereof he speaks, and he is entitled to courteous respect in what he says. But I want to make this observation about this piddling amount of $26,000.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is not a parliamentary word, I may say.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, the shame of this amount is all the more demonstrated and underlined when one realizes, as demonstrated in this Legislature, that on the one hand this government sees fit to subsidize horse racing, but will not do anything about increasing the physical fitness and prowess of our athletes, of our young people of this province.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, this has got a little beyond common sense. All we hear from the other side is what we are doing for the Olympic team. I am as interested as anybody in seeing Olympic stars go from this country. But the problem is that it is the thousands and thousands of youngsters who we are not trying to build up—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what this is for.

Mr. Troy: A little louder please, I cannot hear—

Well, if the hon. Prime Minister were talking I would hear him all right. But the point is that it is not for Olympic stars, but it is for the thousands of youngsters spread out in this province. That is what we want.

Votes 910 and 911 agreed to.

On vote 912:

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Well, may I ask the hon. Minister why this item is less than the estimate was last year? Now, it is $11 million this year, and to my recollection it was $13 million or some odd million last year.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, I guess it is simply because of the stamps. There are more and more people getting regular holiday periods.

Vote 912 agreed to.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to some of the men laid off at Elliot Lake. If they had an opportunity of accepting employment in another area, and wished to withdraw their vacation-with-pay stamps, would the hon. Minister consent to that if they wanted to get that to help them on?

Hon. Mr. Daley: We have been very flexible in that, whether it is within the regulations or not, for I claim that if a man has the money in his pay book it is his money, not ours. I would bend every effort to see that he gets it, if he needs it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this, under what department has this portable pension technical committee been established?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The Department of Economics.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. R. M. Myers (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, first might I congratulate the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) on the atomic conference which he held in January. I might say that I have never attended any proceeding which was at once so pleasurable and so instructive, and I think that my feelings were shared by all the others who attended the conference. I might say that I left the conference full of admiration for our hon. Minister of Energy Resources.

Now, sir, I want to speak today on the number of events, which occurred to me, which I think are important and which I think lead to certain conclusions.

Last summer I met a young German boy, his mother and father were in Germany and he was a student at the University of Toronto in his second year of engineering. The boy proposes to take up law after he gets his engineering degree and I asked him why, if he were going to take up law, he wanted to take up engineering also.

"Well," he said, "I am good at mathematics and I would have to secure my Arts degree in any case, and I can get an engineering degree by one more year, which will serve me in my law course. So that is what I am going to do. When I finish both my engineering and my law, I shall have two professions."

I went for a walk in the country with this boy, and we walked along a lovely river bank in my riding, I asked him if this country made him think of Germany and he said it did. He said, "Many a time I am homesick for my Germany. I think of the weekends that I spent there walking through the beautiful country, but I would never give up Ontario; I would never give up the liberty and the freedom that you have here."

Shortly after I went for that walk with the boy this item appeared in the press:

A political and social philosophy that has at its core government intervention and control over every phase of the economy has been outlined by the planners of the new political party being sponsored by the Canadian Labour Congress and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. The political programme which leans heavily on a redistribution of wealth through a revision of the tax system has been drafted as a guide for study and discussion.

And it seems to follow that this conclusion can be drawn, namely: No one with a love of freedom can find sympathy with the new political party now in the course of formation.

This other incident happened to me.

Some Danish people were buying a house, and the Danish woman came in to sign the mortgage. She could not speak English, she had to speak through an interpreter. I asked her where she came from. She said she came from Denmark with her husband and two children. I asked if they were working. The husband was a steel worker in my riding and the woman was working in a textile mill. The eldest child was learning stenography and youngest child was at school.

I asked her why they left Denmark. "Well," she said, "we left Denmark because during the whole of our married life there, we were not able to save anything." She said that in Denmark the salary of her husband and herself was 14,000 kroner a year, and out of that income tax alone was 4,000 kroner.

I looked up some information about Denmark in our provincial library, and this is what I found.

Denmark is a socialist country with very high social benefits. They have not only old age pensions but such benefits as free medical care, free hospitalization, free medicine, daily sickness allowance, some dental care, funeral allowance, workmen's compensation, free school meals, and daytime care for children. Those are the benefits they get, but they must pay for those benefits, and this is what they pay.

The income of a man has added to it the income of all his dependents for the purpose of taxation. A family which has a combined income of 10,000 kroner, which is the Danish equivalent of $1,400, pays a tax of 22.5 per cent. of the income, or a total of $316. In Canada such a family, of course, would pay no tax at all.

A family with an income of $2,576 pays a yearly tax of $502. In Canada the tax is $74.

In addition to that, in Denmark the people pay a property tax, not based only on the value of real property, but on the value of every other kind of property they have, such things as bank accounts, stocks, automobiles, televisions. The whole is taxed, and a property tax is paid on it. The tax, of course, varies with the value of assets and $7,000 is exempt.

The tax covers all assets excepting women's jewellery, personal libraries, personal art collections and insurance. Every other kind of thing which is worth anything at all is taxed in Denmark.

I wondered if Denmark is such a fine country to live in, and if welfare benefits are so much desired by the inhabitants. I wondered if the population of Denmark was increasing. I looked up what statistics I could and I found this: That, in 1955, there came to Canada from Denmark 1,500 people. That immigration increased in 1956, and in 1957 it amounted to almost 8,000 people. Canada has had an increase in immigration from Denmark in the last 3 years of something more than 500 per cent.

Sweden and Norway are socialistic countries, too, and I looked up the statistics on the 3 Scandinavian countries and found that, in the last 3 years, immigration to Canada from the 3 Scandinavian countries has increased by over 400 per cent.

I think these facts lead to a second conclusion, and the conclusion is that men and women with more than average courage and ambition and industry are prepared to leave wherever they might be if they find that, by doing so, they can improve their economic condition. I think those things are fundamental, and when we hear my hon. friend there talking about more money for youngsters and one thing and another, it is right against fundamental human nature.

I would like to compare our Ontario government with some other socialistic governments. The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) was telling us what a lovely country Sweden is.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): No, it was the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope) who was telling us.

Mr. Myers: This is what appears about Sweden in the last issue of the Reader's Digest. It is written by an associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post:

Many Swedes believe that they live in a land where serenity has become a birthright. This is understandable because their socialist government has fashioned a welfare state, lovingly planned, and thoughtfully complete. Social security, full employment, labour peace.

You wonder whether the Swedes have perhaps carried democracy to new heights of perfection.

Yet there is trouble in this apparent paradise. The suicide rate is high and has been climbing. It is 3 times the Canadian rate. In Stockholm, arrests for drunkenness have almost tripled in recent years. Robberies and burglaries have doubled in 1950, and delinquency of children under 15 years has more than tripled.

One might wonder how the industrialists and the labour unions get along in this welfare state, but they get on very well, and this is why:

Tax provisions for plowing back of profits into going concerns are favourable. Credit restrictions instituted as an anti-inflation measure make it difficult for competitive new enterprises to start up.

The already-rich fare relatively well.

And then the article near its close says this, which I think is relevant:

The socialists' abiding fear is that the welfare system's beneficiaries will ultimately refuse to pay its price, higher taxes and inflation. Resentment on this score has been building up, especially after the government was forced to propose a new 4 per cent. sales tax.

I tell the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) that we have not a sales tax in Ontario, and if we are going to give every youngster athletic equipment, we are going to take the money back from the youngsters' parents. If we give our youngsters baseball gloves, we are going to pay for them and probably by the sales tax.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Myers: Sure, the hon. member can ask me all the questions he likes.

Mr. Singer: How does the hon. member interpret the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister, after the budget, that if he does not get any money from Ottawa, we will have to resort to retrogressive systems of taxation?

Mr. Myers: Well, we do not like it. It is pressures. It is pressures which, I hope, I will relieve a bit by what I am saying, and if more people understood these things they would not exist.

Now then, let me just go on and make some comparisons between the province of Ontario and the province of Saskatchewan. Ever since the present hon. leader of the CCF party (Mr. MacDonald) has been—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Did the hon. member get this out of the Reader's Digest?

Mr. Myers: No, I got this from the Canadian tax foundation and it is perfectly authentic.

Now, first of all, let me say that the socialist government in Saskatchewan and the Progressive-Conservative government in Ontario have been office for the same length of time, within a year. Now then, let me say this, too, that provincial revenues do not come only from provincial taxation, but they come from subsidies from the federal government and from licence fees and sales of natural resources.

But the province of Ontario raises, by way of taxation, 61 per cent. of its total expenditures, while the province of Saskatchewan, which receives almost twice as much from the federal government as does Ontario, and which raises half as much again as Ontario does from the sale of its natural resources, must raise by taxation only 35 per cent. of its expenditures. And the province of Saskatchewan, too, spends more than any other province in Canada on a welfare programme.

It would seem logical then, to expect that many people from the other provinces would flood into Saskatchewan, to take advantage of the heaven on earth which is being directed there by the CCF government.

Mr. Thomas: It is a job to keep them out.

Mr. Myers: But let me say the reverse has been the fact.

In the last 14 years—that is since the CCF government has been in office—the population of Saskatchewan has increased by only 6 per cent. Alberta, on one side of it, has increased by 49 per cent. in the same period, and Manitoba, on the other side, has increased 20 per cent. Ontario increased by 50 per cent.

Now, it is true that last year, Saskatchewan had an increase in its population of 10,000, but the number of live births exceeded deaths in Saskatchewan by 17,000, so when Saskatchewan has an increase during the year of 10,000, it means that 7,000 more people left the province than entered it.

Mr. Thomas: How many died?

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): They do not die there, do they?

Mr. Myers: It seems fair enough, then, to conclude that high welfare benefits do not attract immigrants, and people who are courageous and who are ambitious and who are industrious require what are personal benefits for themselves.

Hon. members might, however, think that even though the welfare benefits are greater, and taxation is higher in Saskatchewan than anywhere else, and even though the population in Saskatchewan has grown less than anywhere else in Canada, nevertheless, perhaps the people who are there may be very happy people with all these benefits—perhaps a prosperous people, people with lots of money in their pockets. So let us see if they are or not.

I do not know just how one can find this out better than by looking at the tax arrears. If one looks at the tax arrears of the different provinces of Canada, they will find that Saskatchewan almost heads the list, and that more than 35 per cent. of the taxes—more than a third of the taxes—are in arrears against 10 per cent. in Ontario.

I would think another indication of the prosperity of the people in Saskatchewan might be the amount of welfare that is granted on a means test, but although I looked I could not find any figures on that.

Mr. Bryden: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Myers: Yes, surely.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to ask him if he has read the recent article written by the financial editor of the Toronto Globe and Mail, hardly a socialist or a socialist paper, outlining the phenomenal economic progress that has been made in Saskatchewan, notwithstanding the very limited natural resources available in that province?

Mr. Myers: I did not read it, but I do not like general statements, I like them brought to some focus. And the figures that I quoted are taken from the figures supplied by the Canadian tax foundation and published in December of last year, and January of this year. I have never read the general statement.

Mr. Bryden: He could broaden his sources a little bit.

Mr. Thomas: The hon. member has never read the Globe and Mail?

Mr. Myers: Now, let me ask another question that I think perhaps is one that might cause some concern, and that is what about our own young people with more than ordinary courage and ambition and industry? Are they staying in Canada or are they not? And what is the use of spending millions and millions on their education unless they stay here?

Now, I do not know how we can find this out exactly, but there are some figures published in the Canada Year Book, and they are somewhat disturbing, too.

This is what they show: They show that Canadians who left Canada to take up residence in the United States numbered 21,800 in 1950, and that the number has more than doubled—in 1957 there was something more than 46,000.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): They cannot stand a Tory government.

Mr. A. Grossman: That was under a Liberal government.

Mr. Myers: Are the Canadians who are going to the United States the ne'er-do-well people that we might be well rid of? No. Let me just tell hon. members what kind of people these are who are leaving Canada for the United States, because it should be important to us, perhaps more important than anything I can think of. This is the kind of people the Canada Year Book for 1957-1958 says they are:

In the United States census of 1950, the Canadian-born were the second largest group of foreign-born constituting 10 per cent. of their number. As for occupation distribution in 1950, both male and female Canadian immigrants to the United States were more fully represented in the professional, managerial and craftsmen groups than the United States labour force as a whole.

Mr. Singer: Refugees from Avro.

Mr. Thomas: Not politicians?

Mr. Grossman: Any lawyers?

Mr. Myers: They are not there—I do not know.

Now, I want to speak about something concerning which perhaps I do not know as much as I ought to. But I shall do the best I can, and what I want to say has to do with provincial taxation.

The 6 million people in Ontario pay, in provincial and municipal taxation, a sum in excess of $1.2 billion. Assuming that a man and his family consist of 4, then every family in Ontario is paying, in addition to federal taxation, $800 every year.

Taxes are of 3 general kinds, I think.

There are the kind that everybody knows about, and taxes which are paid on the same basis by all of us. They consist of licence fees; land transfer taxes; liquor permits; the gasoline tax, excepting for public commercial vehicles; and motor licences, excepting for public commercial vehicles.

Then there is municipal taxation, and in the municipal taxation there is a preference given. The poor man has the preference over the rich man because it can be assumed that the wealthy person lives in a more expensive house than does a poor person. Municipal taxes are based upon the value of the premises occupied, and it is a fair enough assumption, then to say that the rich man pays a bigger municipal tax than does the poor man. The rich man in the municipal taxation carries along the poor man.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr. Myers: Not a bit. I think it is fine and I think it should be extended.

In my city of Galt, the average man pays a tax of $86, and if he has two dependants he will pay $260, and of that $90 will be for education. That is the average.

If anyone in my town pays less than that then he is getting services and education at the benefit of a man who is paying more.

We cannot say, "Let us have the province come to the aid of the municipalities," because the taxpayers are the same. The province consists of taxpayers and the municipalities consist of the same taxpayers, and when the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) says, "Let us have the province come to the aid of the property owners," the only thing that he can mean, in my opinion, is that the municipal taxpayer, who now is paying more than the average rate of taxation should pay less, and that the municipal taxpayer who is now paying something less than the average for municipal taxes should pay more. Otherwise, I ask the hon. leader of the Opposition, how are we going to come to the relief of the taxpayer? How is it possible?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Myers: Oh, certainly.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Just for my information, did the hon. member advise us where Ontario stands with respect to the per capita municipal tax in the Dominion?

Mr. Myers: The hon. leader of the Opposition said $27.50—which is about right—was the average for education in Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. Myers: The hon. leader of the Opposition said $27.50 per capita is the average municipal education tax; $86.50 I think, is the average municipal per capita tax.

Mr. Wintermeyer: How does that compare with the other provinces?

Mr. Myers: I did not go into that. I do not know. However, I think it is a little less than some.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I might just add this with the hon. member's permission—

Mr. Myers: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition like me to tell him? I can look it up and tell him in 5 minutes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, the situation is this, as I recall it: that Saskatchewan is highest and Ontario next.

Mr. Myers: Yes, Saskatchewan is higher than Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The simple fact is—sure, they are all the same, but it is the municipal people who are bearing this cost.

Mr. Myers: But the municipal people and the provincial people are just the same people.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, they are the same individuals, but surely we are interested in equity.

Mr. Myers: Now, let me get on for a minute. The largest single source of Ontario's revenue is from the corporation tax. I think it is $175 million.

The time is now 4 o'clock, and I move then that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, may I say that tomorrow we will deal with the estimates of the department which has to do with Ontario's more unmanageable citizens.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): If it is not too presumptuous on my part, would the hon.

Prime Minister please give us some indication of what the sittings of the House will be next week? Does he expect a night session? We sometimes have night engagements and we like to know the situation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would think, yes. I would think that there would be night sessions on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday next week. But I will let the hon. member know more definitely on Friday.

I would remind the hon. members that the House sits tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

I move the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 4 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 11, 1960

10 O'CLOCK A.M.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, concerning the sittings of the House, I would like to make this motion which I think would be quite satisfactory to hon. members.

I move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that in the coming week, the House will meet on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and on Friday at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and will not meet on Wednesday.

Now, I had thought perhaps by this Wednesday we would have reached the stage where perhaps we could sit on Wednesdays. But the clerk tells me that Wednesday is completely filled with committee meetings, so I think it is better to follow the usual procedure. There will be a night session on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Only?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I will have to see how things stand.

Mr. Reaume: Yes, but the hon. Prime Minister is changing his mind all the time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right. I keep myself in a very elastic state.

Mr. Reaume: I know.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was going to say fluid state but that is not right.

Motion agreed to.

THE GAME AND FISHERIES ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Game and Fisheries Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: There are the annual amendments to The Game and Fisheries Act, and the bill will be sent to the committee on game and fish, the meetings of which are to be held this coming week.

THE HOSPITAL SERVICES COMMISSION ACT, 1957

Hon. M. B. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act, 1957."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is deemed necessary by the commission, in view of the fact that they have had a few occasions when it has been necessary to bring suit against employers who withheld premiums from the payrolls, but did not pay it in to the commission. This has caused a good deal of concern in the minds of employees who, I am given to understand, actually are covered although they were caused some concern about this. This amendment will clear up that problem, we hope.

TORONTO GENERAL HOSPITAL AND WELLESLEY HOSPITAL

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the Toronto General Hospital and the Wellesley Hospital."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as announced a little while ago, it was intended and decided that Wellesley Hospital should be set up as a hospital per se, separate and distinct from the Toronto General Hospital. This legislation will make that possible.

THE MEDICAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Medical Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, several amendments to this Act are sought. As the hon. members doubtlessly know, The Medical Act gives power to the college of physicians and surgeons to rule the destinies and otherwise of physicians and surgeons. Some difficulty was experienced, some time ago, concerning doctors who were employed as such by some body. In one particular case a doctor working for the federal government practiced medicine in Ontario without a licence to do so. This caused a good deal of difficulty and did cause a great deal of concern in the minds of many of our people.

It has been decided to add or to amend The Medical Act to set up a temporary or educational register so that such persons who are fully qualified in some other jurisdiction may practice medicine for a time in Ontario without being duly licenced so to do.

Up to the present time, it has been necessary, under The Medical Act, to give representation to the homeopathic physicians. This is a branch of medicine which has now disappeared from the medical scene to all intents and purposes, and it is no longer necessary that they be represented.

Ontario, at the present time, is divided into 9 medical districts for governmental purposes—that is, professional government purposes—and the representative who has sat on council for the homeopath will now represent a new and separate district.

Northern Ontario has grown and has become much more heavily populated than it was when this Act was passed; it is now being divided into two medical districts—north-eastern Ontario and northwestern Ontario.

The college of physicians and surgeons is also the disciplining body of the profession. Heretofore charges laid have mainly come under the heading of "infamous and disgraceful conduct in a professional respect." Some complaints which come to the college are hardly serious enough to be considered in that category, and the only penalty possible for the college to impose was that the recalcitrant member of the profession be stricken from the register. This is a very serious matter and a very severe penalty.

The college feels that certain members should be disciplined, but the nature of their offence is not such as to require that they should be refused the right to practice. They are asking that the Act be amended to include "improper conduct in a professional manner" and that the college be given the right "to suspend for a time" and not only to "erase from the register."

We are also asking that the Act be amended so that, if a physician or surgeon be admitted to a hospital for the mentally ill for long-term treatment, the college of physicians and surgeons be so advised in order that his name may be taken from the register while he is ill, and until he has been judged physically and mentally competent to resume practice.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): While I realize that normally it is not the procedure to ask questions at this time, will the hon. Minister permit one question with respect to this particular bill? I gathered the hon. Minister's explanation about—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I gave the answer.

Hon. Mr. Frost: This will all go to committee on legal bills, will it not? It will go to committee anyway.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I said I would permit the question.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well I thought so, too.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Well, the acoustics are not such that we can hear.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Nobody said he would permit the question as I understand it. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I am concerned about is this two-year period for doctors who are qualified in another jurisdiction coming into Ontario. As I understand the explanation, this government in some limited fashion is going to permit doctors from outside jurisdictions to practice under controlled circumstances in Ontario within that two-year period.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I know, but that has nothing to do with this, Mr. Speaker. This amendment does not interfere with this. This amendment applies only to doctors who are employed by, say, the federal government.

THE MENTAL HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill was instigated by the public trustee and it is quite technical. Therefore, I am not at this time going to pretend to explain it. It will go to the committee on mental health, where representatives of the public trustee will be present to discuss the bill fully.

The hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) suggests that it should go to the legal bills committee.

THE PHARMACY ACT, 1953

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: The amendments to this bill provide, Mr. Speaker, that the definition of "drug" be broadened to include such products that may, from time to time, be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council. This is because of the fact that the many new drugs, coming on the market very rapidly these days, are well accepted and considered to be drugs before a new issue of the pharmacopoeia has been possible.

The college of pharmacy also asks stipulations, such as is in The Medical Act, that they be permitted to suspend members for lesser offences, and not only to strike them from the register. The maximum fines for different types of offences under the Act are increased as set out in these amendments.

THE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Psychiatric Hospitals Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is the same as the one mentioned for The Mental Hospitals Act. It was instigated by the public trustee and will also go to the legal bills committee.

THE CEMETERIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Cemeteries Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendments to this Act are self-explanatory. Up to the present time, it has not been considered, or it has not been made clear in the Act, that The Cemeteries Act was intended to include crematoria, columbaria and mausolea. We are trying to do that now by this amendment.

Then there has been some doubt in the minds of many that family burial plots should be subject to all the terms and all the rules and regulations of The Cemeteries Act. This was never intended where they are solely family plots. This has been made clear. They will still, however, be subject to the sections of the Act dealing with the removal of bodies.

THE CEMETERIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Cemeteries Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this was brought in as a separate amendment because it was instigated by the public trustee. It also will go to the legal bills committee.

REGISTRATION OF PSYCHOLOGISTS

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to provide for the registration of psychologists."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: The title of the Act defines its intent. It is to register psychologists.

THE DAY NURSERIES ACT

Hon. L. P. Cecile moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Day Nurseries Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, nursery schools or kindergartens that are conducted as part of a public or separate school are already excluded from the Act. The words added to the definition of "day nursery" in clause 2 will extend this exclusion to those nursery schools or kindergartens that are conducted as part of any other educational institution, as for instance private boarding schools that give instructions from grade 1 to 8.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE ACT

Hon. Mr. Cecile moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Department of Public Welfare Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the section that will be amended in this Act at the present time does not serve a great deal of purpose, due to the fact that it does not advise the reader of what it really means, and this is bringing it up to date.

In fact, even when it is brought up to date at every opportunity, it may be misleading because of administrative changes by executive action between sessions of the Legislature. This new section being general, its terms obviate these difficulties.

THE HOMES FOR THE AGED ACT, 1955

Hon. Mr. Cecile moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Homes for the Aged Act, 1955."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are proposing an amendment to this Act to clarify that residents of homes of the aged would be expected to pay the whole or part of the cost of their care and maintenance insofar as their circumstances will permit. Apparently the interpretation of the Act is not clear, and this is to make it definitely clear.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT, 1954

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act, 1954."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have 3 other bills, and these bills embody a lot of individual amendments to various sections. For me to explain them before the hon. members have had an opportunity to read them would, I think, be a waste of time.

Therefore, I would wait until second reading, and I will go into them in more detail, and, of course, they are going to the committee on education.

THE SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND BOARDS OF EDUCATION ACT, 1954

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act, 1954."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Schools Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE SEPARATE SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Separate Schools Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS TAX ACT, 1957

Hon. J. N. Allan moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act, 1957."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, these amendments are of a technical nature only. There is no change in the rate of taxation of any sort, and are made for the purpose of bringing the Act in line with the federal Income Tax Act.

THE SUCCESSION DUTY ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Succession Duty Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, these amendments are made to facilitate the operation of the Act and are not important really.

THE GASOLINE TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Gasoline Tax Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is made for the purpose of making certain that all fuel used in combustion or internal combustion engines in aircraft is considered as gasoline and is taxable.

EXPROPRIATION OR INJURIOUS AFFECTION OF LANDS

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to make uniform the procedures for determining compensation for the expropriation or injurious affection of lands by public authorities."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill will be processed to the point of being dealt with by committee, but there is no intention to put it through to third reading this year.

The intention is that it should be given thorough and careful study, in order that all interested parties can express their views. It has already received a good deal of study, but I think it is of such importance that we should not rush it.

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in explaining this bill very briefly, I would say that it arises as a result of a request and recommendation from the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko), and the effect of it will be to extend the time in which summons may be served under The Highway Traffic Act for offences relating to false statement, change of address, licence plates, mechanical fitness, operators' permits, secondhand vehicles, and reports of accidents. The effect of the amendment would be to give a 6-month period, as applies under the criminal code in the case of service of summons in these cases.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to address a question to the hon. Attorney-General, and may I say, in so doing, that I acknowledge that the hon. Attorney-General is constantly on guard against an injustice, and I am certain he will welcome my question, and it is this.

Is the hon. Attorney-General aware that there is a person by the name of Donald Diette languishing for over 5 months in an Ontario reformatory, waiting to have heard his appeal on conviction for attempted theft and sentence of 15 months?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, in answering that I would say that, while I appreciate the introductory comment before the reading of the question, I did thank my hon. friend last time.

But I am not going to thank him this time for bringing this to my attention, because of the opinion that the question stems more from a desire to embarrass rather than from righteous indignation.

I just want to point out the use of the word languishing, and I am sure the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Ward-robe) will resent this also. But if one takes a look at the dictionary to see what languishing is supposed to mean, languishing means to grow feeble—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well now, what are we doing except indulging—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: —to lose or lack vitality, to live under enfeebling or depressing conditions, to grow slack, to lose intensity, and to droop or pine.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is this why the hon. Attorney-General is so vicious?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Now I am sure that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions will assure the hon. member that people do not do that in his institutions.

What I would like to say is this. If there is a hard case—and this is not a hard case at all—I would be the first to jump with all the alacrity I could to remedy the situation.

But here is what happened in this particular case. This individual in October was caught red-handed, and I am saying that with no thought of prejudicing his position on appeal, because he is not appealing from his conviction. He is appealing from the sentence. He was caught red-handed down in Lindsay taking salvage wire after a fire and was arrested and convicted. An appeal—at least an application—was then made on his behalf before a judge of the appeal court of Ontario for bail last November, and that was refused. He was sentenced at the time to 15 months in the reformatory, and the perfection of the appeal is not yet complete because of the fact that the solicitor or counsel for the accused has not completed it with the court of appeal.

However, if he gets the appeal books in, I am sure this matter could be disposed of during the present month.

I would say also that when it is before the court of appeal, on the question of considering the sentence, the previous record of the individual concerned will also have to be reviewed at that time.

Mr. Gould: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of personal privilege, the term languishing was used by the hon. Attorney-General in his explanation given to me with respect to the appeal of one Bovie.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Attorney-General is wrong twice now.

Mr. Gould: Let me say, with the greatest respect, that William Richardson, Diette's lawyer, a partner in the firm of Frost, Frost and Richardson of Lindsay, has complained about this case.

Some Liberal hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gould: May I go further, Mr. Speaker, and say that he informs us that Diette has appealed, but the hearing is being delayed because the record of the trial has not been transcribed. This bears similarity to the Bovie case, and I think that the court reporter, O. N. Cook, is generally overworked, for she holds down a number of jobs, relating to court reporting—and at her own wish, I believe. Now that comes from the other side.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Now that my hon. friend has brought in the name of the court reporter, I certainly already have had inquiries made as to her case load, her work load, and also her duties and efficiency, and I certainly intend to follow that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I might say, seeing that I have been drawn into this matter, that I do not think this person has languished at all.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think the hon. member will find, after he listens to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions, that he has been entertained during these last months. I have never heard of the complaint myself before, and this is the first I have heard of it.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF REFORM INSTITUTIONS

On vote 2001:

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Chairman, I want to, in rising this morning, thank the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) for putting my estimates on a Friday morning—especially this Friday morning—for two reasons: that is, that all hon. members will be in a most affable mood, expecting to spend the weekend by their fire-side in their family circle with their loved ones. This will naturally engender a feeling of kindness and passivity, and certainly not intervention, in the passing of these estimates.

I think it will likewise apply to the press boys, who put on that tremendous extravaganza last night, and who this morning will perhaps be in an affable mood and too tired to inject any acrimony in the reporting of the estimates that I will present this morning.

I am reminded, Mr. Chairman, of the last election, when my opponents said that they hoped in northwestern Ontario to get a Minister of Lands and Forests or a Minister of Mines in the north, and instead they have been given a jail inspector. I laughed along with that until I remembered the reason that was said was because so few people realize the tremendous responsibility of The Department of Reform Institutions in this province.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Was that said by the hon. Minister's opponents?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: My Liberal opponent.

We have in The Department of Lands and Forests a very fine hon. Minister (Mr. Spooner) charged with the responsibility of our great forest wealth, our game and fish, a tremendous department. And, in our very able hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney), one who is charged with the great natural mineral resources of this great province.

But when we come to speak of Reform Institutions, we are charged with the responsibilities of human beings who have been unfortunate enough to infract the laws of this province. They are committed to our care, and every day there is the changing picture, regardless of what we do, in the handling of these unfortunate inmates who have been convicted, by law, to spend a term in the institutions over which I have the responsibility.

When we come to think that this department embraces some 3,000 dedicated employees, when we realize that we have a constant population in those institutions in excess of 5,000 at all times—men and women, boys and girls—when we consider we have the responsibility of 13,000 people constantly on probation, and between 50,000 and 60,000 people going in and out of those institutions yearly, with a budget of almost $17 million, we realize something of the magnitude and responsibility of the department of this government called The Department of Reform Institutions. I think the reason that the term jail inspector was used, was because not enough of our people visit those institutions and make themselves aware of the tremendous department it is.

And I am at the present time giving thought to setting up voluntary visiting committees to visit these institutions at different periods, to bring some comfort to the inmates who we know should not be shut off from society during their incarceration. It is bad mental therapy, and we hope that we will be able to start a system of that kind which we consider will be a great help.

I was down in Florida last summer, at a correctional convention there, and Governor Leroy Collins of Florida told this story.

He said that his wife was not very well and, in leaving for the office one morning, he said to his 3 children—there was Johnny age 15, Mary 12 and little Bobby 6—and he said, “Now children, your mother is not well, and I would like you today, while I am away, to help her with her household duties and lighten her load. I am going to ask you when I come home tonight what you have done to help her.”

When he got home, he said to Johnny: “What did you do Johnny?”

He said: “I washed the dishes.”

“Mary, what did you do?”

She said: “I dried the dishes.”

“Bobby, what did you do?”

He said: “I picked up the pieces.”

That story indicates to you, Mr. Chairman, and the hon. members of this House, that our job is constantly trying to pick up the pieces of those human beings who have had the unfortunate circumstance of being incarcerated in our institutions. Their lives are damaged, their lives are broken, and it is our constant responsibility to try to pick up the pieces, and mend the whole, to send them out of our institutions as citizens of which this province and this Dominion can be proud.

I often think of the old rhyme that says:

Don't look for the flaws as you go through life

And even if you find them

It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind

And to look for the virtues behind them.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, this is a tremendously responsible position. With the dedicated employees who make up the personnel of that great department, we are trying to do that job in a humanitarian way—to better an ever-increasing incidence of criminology in this province.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions, I take great pleasure in reporting to this House on a year of steady and satisfying progress. It has been a year which has seen the culmination of many of our pilot projects with specialized units and services for small groups of inmates.

The year brought to fruition work on the closing of a gap in specialized institutions for females, both adult and juvenile, and we are particularly proud of our new projects which emphasize training, treatment and rehabilitation.

The department concerns itself with a great number of human problems—as you well know, Mr. Chairman—over 4,000 of them at the last count, and no one would suggest that we could ever solve them all, or even approach 100 per cent. success.

What we do know is that every small specialized improvement we can make adds up to an increase in our general percentage, and is of value to the province not simply in terms of financial savings, but in the savings of human lives and dignity.

Here, may I point out that, in the salvaging of human lives, we must consider not only the offender—who pays his debt to society—but his immediate family, his wife and children, who often pay a heavier penalty for a debt they did not incur.

It is disturbing to note that, on looking over the statistics of the prison population at the beginning of the last decade, and comparing them with present statistics, we find that commitments to the jails in the province have increased by 43 per cent. Now, that may be due to an increase in population, naturally it is, but it is very high indeed. Commitments to our adult institutions have increased by 33 per cent. and the tragedy is, Mr. Chairman, that commitments to our training schools have increased by 79 per cent.

Therefore, we must be continually on the alert to find new ways and means to cope with these problems.

And, Mr. Chairman, and hon. members, it has been forcibly brought to my attention that, in 93 per cent. of the committals to these juvenile institutions, it shows the lack of 3 things in the home—the love of a mother, the love of a father, and a Christian education in the home. These are the great lacks among these children who are committed to our institutions. These are lacks that we must do everything within our power to try to correct and to improve constantly.

Our annual report for the year ending March 31, 1959, outlines the problems which confronted the department at the time of its formation in 1946, the policy and the planning which had to be carried out, that which we have achieved, and some of our plans for the future. It was a gigantic task that was started in 1946.

Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss in my duties if I did not pay tribute to the former Ministers of this department, and the senior officials for the vision they had, and the time and effort they expended, in establishing a progressive system of treatment and training for those who have been committed to our care.

There were many obstacles which they had to overcome, and there were many discouraging incidents and there will continue to be. But they relentlessly stuck to their task until today, I believe, we have a programme of which we can be justly proud.

Certainly errors were made and events happened over which we had no control. But every organization has had its difficulties which tend to retard progress, as was so ably stated by the great old Scottish bard, Robert Burns, when he said, and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) will delight in this because he is a very prominent Scotsman:

*The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft agley,
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain
For promis'd joy.*

This year, all our efforts have been directed to the expansion of those methods which are, in generous measure, proving to be of benefit to our inmates. New ideas have been given ample treatment, old methods have been reviewed, giving a constant pattern of progress.

This has been a stimulating year in reform institutions, stimulating and exciting not so much from terrific highlights, but the excitement one feels when a jigsaw puzzle starts taking definite shape.

There have been highlights, of course, and perhaps they should be mentioned first.

Shortly after assuming the position of Minister of Reform Institutions, Mr. Chairman, I called a meeting of the senior officials of head office, and the superintendents of all adult institutions. At this time, I announced that corporal punishment was to be abolished in our institutions.

Before taking such a step I compared the number of times corporal punishment had been used as a disciplinary measure, one year with another, over the last few years, and I noticed that it had been gradually decreasing since 1956. Therefore, I felt that it was time to abolish it altogether.

As was to be expected, I was criticized by some for being soft, and commended by others for such a progressive step. It is well over a year now since the last time corporal punishment was used. My superintendents tell me, without exception, that discipline has been maintained, and that control of the institutions has not been weakened by the removal of the strap.

This to me has been a step forward in our methods of treatment and training for the successful rehabilitation of the offender.

Now, I have here two letters, Mr. Chairman, from the superintendents of two of our biggest institutions, that I would like to read. One is from the superintendent of Burwash, who says this:

I would first point out that the last time corporal punishment was administered at Burwash was October 7, 1958, 16 months ago. It is now 8 months since it was officially abolished.

In the 8 months previous to abolition, we had 240 on misconduct report. In the 8 months since, we have had a total of 210 on report. Thus, it will be seen, we have actually cut down on misconduct report. No more difficulty has been encountered in control of inmates than previous to abolition.

That is the superintendent of Burwash, who agrees that the abolishment of the strap did not in any way lower the disciplinary measures in his institution.

Then I have one from Mr. Sanderson, the superintendent of Guelph, a man who has had a tremendous experience in penology, and a man who is doing a great job with that tremendous institution.

He is talking here about the young men with whom we have had trouble in that institution, and also about the strap:

First and of the greatest importance—I quote, —is the behaviour temperament of many of the young chaps we have here. They feel that if they do not uphold the example, the tradition that has been set, they will be marked as afraid or, in their own term, "chicken."

Second, many of the young fellows we have here have never worked or have done little. They find working in the tailor shop at the sewing machines to be a boring and monotonous type of work, which they consider to be girl's work, and therefore, inferior to them.

Whether or not the removal of corporal punishment gave these people an added incentive is problematical. I would emphasize again that this trait of insubordination is confined to the tailor shop. The same inmates, when in the main building, are quiet and orderly. I might add that I feel that measures we have taken will preclude any possibility of any further outbursts of destruction in the tailor shop.

With the exception of the instance just mentioned, the institution is run quietly and normally since the removal of corporal punishment, a point that caused questioning, and must be admitted, was viewed with some slight apprehension because of the safety of staff. Would the removal of corporal punishment be a signal to inmates to attack staff whenever the mood was upon them? I am referring now to individual efforts.

We are happy to state that there is no increase in attacks upon staff. As a matter of fact, considering again the number we have and the types we have, our record in this respect has been exceptional.

There are some 1,000 inmates in that great institution, and in conclusion the superintendent says this:

I feel, however, added effort by staff, relying upon experience and discretion has helped considerably. Judicious use of other measures of control has proven satisfactory, and it is my considered opinion—after discussion with senior officials—that control of this institution has not been weakened by the removal of corporal punishment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, and hon. gentlemen, I think that is the most decisive answer to those who said it was a very wrong thing to do, to abolish corporal punishment.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We are all on the hon. Minister's side.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Come right over to our side. This is the home for all progressive people.

Mr. MacDonald: That is good. Now they have progressed.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Another highlight of the year was the establishing of a new industry at the Ontario reformatory, Millbrook which—as hon. members know—is a total custodial unit. I refer to the printing of text books in braille for blind school children.

There are 3 schools for blind children in Canada: our own at Brantford, one in Nova Scotia, and one in British Columbia. The supply of text books for these already handicapped children has been inadequate, and inevitably costly, because of the specialized demand.

However, due to the great spirit of co-operation between the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and our department, we managed to overcome the inherent difficulties of setting up a new production based on skilled workmanship.

Selected inmates at Millbrook reformatory are trained by a staff member, who is now a certified instructor in braille.

The Canadian National Institute for the Blind supply us with sample copies of books they require. The markings are first embossed in braille on a double aluminum sheet, and finally printed on paper by means of pressure rollers.

It has been no small achievement, in the space of 6 months, to deliver not only 500 books, but books which are stated by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind to be of the highest quality. This is obviously work of tremendous value to our entire nation. Our staff and inmates are justly proud of being associated with assisting in the education of sightless children. The therapeutic effect on the inmates engaged in this work is remarkable.

In other words, it shows that these men, who are labelled as our worst offenders, like to feel that they are in some way paying the debt to society and helping the underprivileged.

They work with great skill and enthusiasm, and by helping others they are learning to help themselves to take their places in society.

Thus, we have in this small operation a double play in rehabilitation which far exceeds its financial saving. There is a financial saving of course. And I think the Canadian National Institute for the Blind are receiving these books at one-fifth of the cost that they formerly paid for them. We charge, as is usual, for our raw materials and overhead expenses.

As further evidence of our progress, we opened 3 new units during the year, namely: Trelawney House; Ingleside; and a reception and diagnostic centre for girls.

Trelawney House is located at Port Bolster. It is a small unit with an intimate atmosphere, giving almost the individual attention of the home. As such, it is very well suited to young girls with strong feelings of rejection. The unit has a capacity for 20 girls, and life there is closely woven with the community. The girls attend the local church, some of them are in the choir, they borrow books from the local library to supplement their own.

Those who have completed grade 8 attend high school in Cannington, travelling to and from daily in the local school bus.

We are very pleased with the progress that is being made at this small unit.

The Ontario women's guidance centre, known as Ingleside, is located near Brampton. This is a small unit with a capacity for 25 girls. It was opened in July as a specialized treatment and diagnostic centre for such inmates of Mercer reformatory as were suitable to make use of its programme.

This is an absolutely open institution, and the programme is purely academic and vocational, geared to the needs of each individual girl.

The success of this unit will be better judged in 5 years. But, after 8 months of operation, we can say that the theoretical programme is in fact working in practice. We are achieving success with these girls whilst they are at the institution.

We see in them changed attitudes, better behaviour, and better social habits. We feel this marked change is due to the personal counselling and the high interest the girls take in their own training. The academic programme is stressed by the girls' own motivation.

So far, 18 girls have been at Ingleside. It is intended to increase this to its full complement of 25 as soon as feasible. We picked these girls very carefully from Mercer to move them into this open setting, the ones that we figure have the greatest chance of improvement.

For some time now, the need for a reception and diagnostic centre for young girls committed to our training schools was felt, but it did not come into reality until this year. Such a centre has been opened at Galt.

The object of this centre is to observe all committals with a view to transferring them, after an observation period, to the type of setting best suited to their needs. The centre has a staff of professional personnel, including a social worker, psychologist and psychiatrist, and is obviously an ideal centre for research.

Each girl admitted is given a psychiatric examination at the inception of her incarceration.

I would like to mention, but I am not going to go too fully into our boys' schools at Bowmanville and Cobourg, two great institutions that look after the little fellows. The little fellows are the ones I love.

I remember a little while ago being at Cobourg. One little fellow there has big china blue eyes and a big chest; he is just 11. He is the catcher on the ball team. His committal record is the silent boy. He was committed for running away from home.

Mr. Chairman, let me tell hon. members something about his history.

His father used to lash him unmercifully at the slightest provocation of wrongdoing. But, in addition to that, he made him hold his two hands above his head with one of his shoes in each hand, and kneel down for two hours at a stretch. He was committed for running away from home. Goodness gracious, it is a wonder he ever stayed at home. And that little fellow today is allowed to go out to see his parents for an hour each week, and he comes back to our institution, Mr. Chairman, crying to get back.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The father should be in jail.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The other day, when they were going to their schoolroom with their supervisor, I said to the supervisor: "I want to talk to these boys." So I had a talk to them.

I said: "You know, the greatest justification and satisfaction I can get for our new humanitarian programme is if one of you boys would get to be Minister of Reform Institutions some day." And I said, "There is not a thing to prevent you from doing it."

I looked down at this little fellow and I said, "Would you like to be Minister of Reform Institutions?" He said, "No, no." And I said, "What would you like to be?" He said: "A policeman."

They are the finest of the fine, these young people who come into our institutions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Is there anything good about children who do not go into institutions?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Thank God, Mr. Chairman, that we feel we are doing something to correct a great wrong for these future citizens of Canada, because they react so well to the—

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): What is that about the finest of the fine in the reform institutions?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, look at their committal records and their homes.

Mr. Singer: What did the hon. Minister do with that man who tortured that child? What did he do with the father of that—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Apparently he is beyond the law. There is nothing that says that a father cannot discipline his child. He could be charged with cruelty but apparently he was not.

An hon. member: Why not?

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): What would the hon. Minister do personally?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I will tell hon. members what I would do if it was my duty, but unfortunately my duty is to try to look after them when they are committed to my care.

Mr. Whicher: Well, what would the hon. Minister do?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I do not need to tell this House that penology and criminology have not kept pace with the other sciences. Only two Canadian universities, to my knowledge, have a course in this science. I understand that our own Toronto University is establishing a course in criminology this year.

In order to assist me in an advisory capacity, in the methods to be adopted for the treatment of the offender, I appointed an advisory council last September. This council consists of 9 people, all of whom are interested in the welfare of mankind, and some are experienced in this specialized field of penology.

This council is known as MACTO which means the Minister's advisory council for the treatment of the offender. These are men and women, Mr. Chairman, who are outstanding in this field. I am proud of the recommendations that this committee have already made. They sit once a month, and they have put hours in on this very important work which they realize and love. The council is as follows:

1. Rev. Martin Pinker, OBE—chairman of the training schools advisory board, and who was for 29 years director of men's central after-care in England before coming to this country. He is an outstanding gentleman who is doing a great service in our institutions in this province and I am proud to have him on my left, listening to this talk today.

2. Mr. William Common, QC—deputy Attorney-General and member and one of the architects of the Fauteux committee report.

3. Mr. Joseph McCulley—warden of Hart House and member of the Fauteux committee, also former deputy commissioner of penitentiaries.

4. Her Honour Judge Helen Kinnear of Haldimand—first and only woman judge in the Commonwealth, and a constituent of my very dear friend the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) of this government. She is a wonderful lady with a great knowledge of the treatment of the offender.

5. The Venerable Archdeacon M. C. Davies—rector of St. George's Church, Walkerville; deputy director of chaplaincy services RCAF, 1942-1944, and a former Speaker of this House.

6. Dr. W. Cardwell—psychiatrist and superintendent of the Ontario Hospital at Penetang. He is a dedicated man who is doing a tremendous job in that institution, and is of great assistance to us.

7. Mrs. Helen MacKenzie of Beaverton—she served on the town council from 1946 to 1950, and as reeve from 1950 to 1952. She has been director of Ontario county children's aid society for many years as well.

8. Mr. Wallace Murdoch—Ford Motor Company executive and, also, member of training schools advisory board. Mr. Murdoch is a dedicated man who does, Mr. Chairman, all this work for nothing. He refuses to accept anything. Service to the offender is his only wish.

9. Right Rev. A. J. Hogan—DP, VG—St. Agnes Church, vicar-general of the diocese of Fort William. I looked for a great penologist and humanitarian in my own area, and I must say to the hon. Minister of Mines that it was a member of his great Church that was chosen, due to his great humanitarianism and his great regard for the offender. He is a great man.

The inaugural meeting of the council was held on November 17.

The terms of reference I gave them for initial discussion was "The Rehabilitation of the Offender." To date, 6 meetings have been held, and certain recommendations have already been made. These recommendations appertain to surveys and investigations that had already been carried out in the department, and also on the functions of the Ontario parole board to meet the changing situation arising from the future implementation of the Fauteux committee's report.

Many hon. members are aware, Mr. Chairman, that there are going to be, we hope, great changes when that report is finally brought down, as it will be before long.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): How long?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would say I will just come to that in one second.

As I said, definite recommendations have been made. I have accepted these recommendations, and we are now working on the practical details necessary for their implementation.

The situation, incidentally, on the Fauteux committee's recommendations is that the 3-member planning committee—I would like the hon. member to listen—consisting of Mr. Allen McLeod, QC, Mr. James McLaughlin and Colonel Stone—has done an extensive survey of all penal systems throughout the North American continent, the British Isles, and part of Europe. This committee visited all the institutions under my jurisdiction, as well as those in other parts of Canada, and many in other countries.

I understand that their report has now been submitted to the hon. Minister of Justice in Ottawa (Mr. Fulton), and we must now await direction from this source.

Now, I should say that that would be fairly soon. I am going to make another prediction, Mr. Chairman, that I believe some of their suggestions, anyway, are going to be along the line of some of the open institutions that we already have at Hillsdale, and McCreight's Dam, and these other places.

I would like to say this regarding Hillsdale. We have a camp there of 60 to 90 men. They do work in the woods and so on. At night, everybody goes to bed at 11, gets up at 6 in the morning. There is not a key, there is not a watchman or anything else in that institution. In 5 years we have never lost a prisoner, nobody has ever tried to escape. What a great vindication of the honour system. We could try it more all the time, in my opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the hon. Minister take so long to bring it in? I know why, he had to buck the hon. Prime Minister all the way.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Oh no, I should say not. I am going to say this to the hon. member for York South. When I took over this position, the directive given to me was, "the responsibility is yours. Any humanitarian instance that you wish to bring into those institutions will have our full backing." They were the hon. Prime Minister's words to me.

Mr. MacDonald: They had been badgered for. He finally had to give in.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Another highlight of the year, and we hope one of the most successful projects we have ever embarked upon, was group therapy at the Mercer reformatory with a specialized group of female offenders. Hon. members know drug addiction has been much to the fore these days, that is why I mention this somewhat in detail.

This project was under the leadership of our Protestant chaplain at the Mercer, Rev. Maurice Flint, one of the best qualified men in this field. This is, at the reformatory, they had a specialized group of female offenders.

This experimental project was started in July 1958, mainly with first offenders—at the Mercer reformatory. The project involved a "group therapeutic" approach to a selected group of approximately 10 girls, each group receiving 30 sessions of 3 hours each.

From July 1958, until the opening of Ingleside at Brampton in July 1959, over 40 girls were processed through the Mercer centre. At the present time, within the limits of our knowledge, not one of these girls has appeared before the courts again. Less than 10 per cent. were unable to maintain parole regulations, and were returned to complete their sentences in the care of the institution.

The aims and goals of this project were that:

The girls receive education according to their perceived needs and interests, and that they be enabled to learn, in the area of human relations, their personal methods of socializing, and that this should take place with a minimum disruption of their present social milieu.

It was hypothesized that the confused thinking, the misconception and inadequate ways of reacting and behaving, of these girls could be perceived in a new way, and that dynamic reorientation of lives could be attained in the group setting.

The sessions involved a tripartite approach to the girls' problems.

Firstly, an hour was given for a group didactic session, in which the girls received lectures on topics chosen by the members. Such topics included family relationships, their personal traumas or past experiences, personality problems, and their future aims and goals.

Secondly, there was interpersonal or group therapy, during which the members are helped to gain an insight into their own personal ways of behaving and relating to other people.

Thirdly, social therapy allowed for free discussion around a meal table before returning to the main unit.

A "milieu therapeutic" approach is introduced, inasmuch as the treatment centre is away from the main unit, and the girls are trusted to journey backwards and forwards to this new setting. In other words, they are being taught responsibility not to run away, and other things of that kind. This approach permits each participant to review the meaning of being institutionalized, and the value of freedom in a home setting.

The value of this therapeutic approach has been clearly established, as participants gain insight into their personal problems—both intellectual and emotional—re-evaluate their way of life, gain support from others in their desire to reorientate their behaviour, and begin to build for the first time trustworthy and significant therapeutic relationships.

Statistical returns, post-group psychiatric interviews with each girl, the obvious eager interest amongst first offenders to participate voluntarily in this programme, with not one attempt being made to escape in one whole year of operation, have indicated the decided success of this venture. Mr. Chairman, it has been a decided success.

With the opening of Ingleside and the removal of first offenders to that institution, it was decided to use facilities now available at the Mercer for some other form of group counselling. A meeting of the superintendent, the consulting psychiatrist, the director of social work and Mr. Flint resulted in the decision, not only to redirect the group counselling approach into some other area, but—in view of the increase in the number of drug addicts at that unit—to approach this problem with these techniques.

And let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, and hon. members, that Rev. Mr. Flint and his church here in Toronto have some 24 convicted drug addicts attending church who were formerly considered hopelessly addicted. They are now free of that terrible scourge, and have been attending regularly at his church every Sunday for some two years. Here is a great indication of what his treatment can do.

A selection or screening committee was established, including the superintendent, the consulting psychiatrist, and the group leader and criteria for selection determined—these are drug addicts I am speaking of, Mr.

Chairman—it was felt that, in the initial stages, this effort should include many first-offender women drug addicts. These were to be within a specific age range, preferably under 35, with fairly normal intelligence quotients, possessing reasonable ability to relate amicably with their fellows, and who were prepared voluntarily to participate in this venture.

There was an article in the Toronto Daily Star the other day about Dr. Hill's saying cessation was the only solution, and with that I agree. One cannot taper off on drugs any more than one can on liquor—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is wrong.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I may be wrong but that is what has not been proved wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: The scientific approach is the opposite.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: He will find that cessation is the thing. On November 30, 1959, the first group of 8 girls was selected.

Mr. MacDonald: They should taper off.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: At the initial interview, one member stated not only her unwillingness to participate, but her intention to return to drug addiction, and she requested permission to withdraw from the group. She had not made up her mind that she wanted to stop drugs. That must be within one's own heart and cessation is the real cure.

The same treatment procedures were used as during the previous year. Again the girls participated well, supported the programme enthusiastically, and no attempted escape was made.

The first group ended during the last week of January, 1960, and all available data would seem to indicate not only that this has proven a worthwhile experience to the participants, but that they have gained insight and new understanding to their personal approach to life's problems. One member has been released, and is maintaining contact with staff personnel on her own volition. The remainder of the group, who still have time to serve, have requested a continuation of the programme, and meet with the group leader for one hour each week.

As the first group ended, other drug addicts had already requested permission to be included in the next session, which commenced on February 1, and is already half way through its 30 sessions. Some others have already requested to be included in this programme in the future.

Realizing the extremely difficult problems of adjustment facing the drug addict on release, the department has appointed a special parole and rehabilitation officer for the purpose of assisting these girls in finding homes and jobs to go to.

Although it is still much too early to say exactly what benefit of this project may be, there appears to be little doubt, in the minds of those who are close to the project, that it is a significant progressive step in the approach to the treatment of drug addicts, and may well open new means of helping them in their serious and difficult problems.

A matter of major concern to any department, charged with the responsibility of rehabilitating people who have broken the law, are those persons who are addicted to either alcohol or narcotics.

Mr. Chairman, I am one who has had tremendous experience in both those fields. I have been in contact with people who have been offenders for a great many years. I know the problem. I am no person who imagines that one can, in a day, cure these terrible afflictions. But certainly we are trying. When I see things in the press that are far from factual, it really does disturb me, and I think it disturbs some of the offenders that we are trying to do something for and I believe that our policy is one that is forward-looking and progressive.

Those addicted to alcohol comprise the largest single group undergoing sentence. Although the drug addicts are, fortunately, many fewer in number, they have long been considered to be one of the most difficult groups to treat and rehabilitate with any degree of success.

Eight years ago, our department established a clinic at the Ontario reformatory, Mimico, where men could be treated for alcoholism while undergoing the sentence imposed upon them by the courts. It was, at that time, the first clinic of its kind in the world in such a setting.

Many Canadian provinces, states of the United States, and other countries have since sent their representatives to it, to study its methods, with a view to setting up a similar facility of their own.

Since it opened, close to 3,000 patients have been treated there. After treatment has been received, our rehabilitation officers, in addition to endeavouring to rehabilitate patients within their own communities, have kept careful check on the progress of each patient, on a voluntary basis, for at least a year after they were discharged from the clinic.

We know, as a result—and this is important—that some 40 per cent. have been greatly helped there.

Apart from the humanitarian aspect of treatment we know, too, that in the long run it costs less to treat a man who is addicted to alcohol while he is undergoing sentence than it does to do nothing about this problem.

Encouraged by early success in treating alcoholism, our department decided to establish a second clinic for the treatment of those who were addicted to narcotics. While the Americans had preceded us in this form of treatment, for people undergoing sentence, our clinic was the first of its kind in Canada. Some 25 per cent. of its patients have been greatly helped by the treatment received.

It has always been, and continues to be, the policy of this department to transfer any inmate who becomes psychotic to an Ontario Hospital for care and treatment.

There are, nevertheless, some important aspects to mental illness for which a department such as ours must assume responsibility. Among these are the rather complicated ones of appropriately diagnosing inmates who may be mentally ill and providing short-term psychiatric treatment for those who might benefit from it.

Our neuro-psychiatric clinic at Guelph, which was established on the second floor of our 64-bed hospital there, has performed these functions admirably. By so doing, it has arrested the mental condition of many inmates from becoming worse, as well might have been the case if the services of such a clinic had not been available.

Courses at our training centres have been considered for their effectiveness and coverage. At both Brampton and Burtch, we are constantly striving to review and improve the courses of training. At Brampton, a limited vocational course to cater to shorter term offenders is now under study.

Dr. J. M. Bennett, formerly chief inspector of separate schools, has just completed a special survey on the training programme of each Ontario and private training school, concerning the academic, vocational, recreational and religious training programme. His report is presently being studied, with a view to implementing his proposals in the most effective manner at the start of the new school year.

In all aspects of our administration, we have had consistent revision and improvements, and are constantly striving for greater efficiency. The library services, enabling those inmates who wish to spend their time more profitably, have been improved considerably. For others, who just wish to get their time over as easily as possible, there is a fund of recreational reading available, helping them to avoid dangerous introspection.

Food services are under the constant supervision of our foods administrator in order to provide an adequate, varied and balanced diet.

Industrially, we keep constant check on new methods that will enable us to improve the quality and variety of our products. Our cannery at the Ontario reformatory, Guelph, has been completely reorganized in order to increase our production. At the industrial farm, Burtch, we are planning to build a new tailor shop to replace the one burned down.

This latter fact, by the way, should not be regarded as part of our deliberate policy.

On pages 27 and 28 of our annual report for the year ending March 31, 1959, hon. members will see listed the various items produced in our industrial shops—amounting to a total of nearly $3 million. These items are priced at approximately 10 per cent. above cost. If they had to be purchased on the open market, they would cost between $4 million and $5 million. I always say, Mr. Chairman, that if the production of this department were sold at retail prices, we would probably be the only department of the government that showed a profit.

One of our newest industries is the manufacture of park picnic tables for The Department of Lands and Forests; also, for The Department of Highways.

Mr. Nixon: I thought the hon. Minister said it cost $17 million to run the department.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. Nixon: So how can he show a profit with $8 million—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Ah, if we got the proper price we might.

Last year, that is 1959, we manufactured approximately 11,000 tables which we sold for $17 each. They would certainly be double this price commercially; thus, a saving of $187,000.

One cannot measure in dollars and cents the training and rehabilitative value of such work. Our objective is to employ the inmates as constructively as possible, not only producing a marketable product, but—more important—to teach the inmate that he must work in order to earn an honest living.

It has been wisely said that "Idleness is the mother of want," and idleness in prison only breeds discontent and trouble. Vocational and industrial training—including guidance and plans for job placement on release—is considered the keystone of modern reformatory programmes. Lack of such a training programme is perhaps the worst single weakness of any rehabilitation system.

Let me say this, Mr. Chairman, that, as long as the courts continue to send offenders to correctional institutions, we legislators are obligated to employ them constructively. Therefore, we must make this a reality by providing training and work programmes under standards that will enable these offenders, upon release, to take their places in civilian life as useful members of society.

With respect to construction, I would like to state that in 1959 the following projects were completed, or nearly completed:

1. A cattle barn was constructed at the Burwash industrial farm by inmate labour.
2. The new Camp Bison at Burwash will be ready for occupancy this summer.
3. A new addition has been built to Kenora district jail.
4. A sewage disposal plant has been built at the Ontario training school for boys, Bowmanville.
5. The power house at the Burtch industrial farm is nearing completion.
6. An extension to the cannery at Guelph was completed and is now operating.

Our construction plans for 1960 are as follows:

1. New training school for girls at Lindsay.
2. New training school for boys at Simcoe.
3. New dormitories and single staff quarters at the Monteith industrial farm to replace the temporary buildings.
4. Enlargement and additions to the power houses at the Ontario reformatory, Guelph, and the Ontario reformatory, Mimico.
5. Construction of a new administrative building at the Ontario reformatory, Mimico.
6. Additions to the district jails at Fort Frances and Sault Ste. Marie in order to provide more accommodation.

7. A new tailor shop at the Burtch industrial farm.

8. Plans are also being made for a training school for boys, also a reformatory for women in the Lakehead area.

Mr. MacDonald: At Port Arthur?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I do not know, sir.

Mr. MacDonald: He is keeping the cabinet well satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It could not be in a better place. These, Mr. Chairman, are our plans for construction for next year.

But, more important than buildings is the recruitment of additional lay and professional staff to carry out our plans for the treatment, training and rehabilitation of the offender.

So at this time, Mr. Chairman, I want to pay tribute to the staff of this great department. I have a devoted and dedicated group of people of whom I am amply and justly proud. Our total staff, including district jails, numbers almost 3,000.

I would like, at this time, to read to this House a letter which I received from our superintendent at Mimico recently. This letter was written by an inmate, and sent to one of the magistrates in this city. He says:

ONTARIO REFORMATORY, MIMICO

February 8, 1960

MAGISTRATE THOBURN,
CITY HALL, TORONTO.

DEAR SIR:

On October 9, 1959, I was before you and received a 6-month sentence for bigamy. At that time, I had been in custody since September 27 and, as it was my first experience in a court and I did not have a lawyer, I was not aware of court procedure.

I realize that the sentence was not unduly severe, although I neglected to bring out at the time that the wife involved was only interested in getting her freedom, I fully realize that I had done very wrong and must expect to be punished for it.

Since that time, I have spent 4 months in a camp operated by Mimico reformatory, and I think it has been a great help to look at things in the proper light and think things out clearly. The atmosphere and conditions have helped a lot. The guards here are a great help by their treatment and handling of us inmates, so that I wish to return to society as a useful person.

(signed)

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Anybody who can fool a woman can fool an inspector, too.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member has something there. That is just a case in point, Mr. Chairman, of what this dedicated staff I speak of is doing.

As further evidence of the type of staff we have in our institutions, I want to read the public school inspector's report on his inspection of our academic section of the Ontario training school for boys at Cobourg, and I quote:

All members of the staff are interested, and are finding satisfaction in their work. Their personalities encourage good co-operation. Their teaching shows thought, preparation and effortful leadership. Organization and management are constructive, and know good standards in those set formerly by Mr. Harry Garraway, and now by acting principal, Mr. Stewart Nicholas. Records and reports are faithfully kept for institutional purposes.

There is evidence of definite progress throughout, though necessarily affected by admissions, graduations and placements. The organization of "boy of the week" and "(work) book of the week" stimulates definite effort on the part of the boys in conduct and neatness. The general attitude of the pupils towards their work in the classroom appears to be quite of the standard found in classrooms generally.

Books are made available to the boys, and considerable effort is devoted to interesting them in general reading.

Grade reading, arithmetic, English and spelling receive good leadership from the teachers, who make willing effort to give special assistance where needed. They are encouraged to be continually diagnosing for these weak places, that required help may be given.

Likewise, encouragement is given to the recognition of good effort that the boys may know the satisfaction which success brings.

It is a pleasure to visit this school. The courtesy and the gratitude of the boys yield gratifying experience. To assist them, to reassure them in difficult places, to sense their co-operative efforts constitute a satisfaction. The spirit with which they respond to their tasks about the school, the courtesy with which they address their teachers, reflect a healthy school spirit.

At the conclusion of this inspection, the undersigned had the opportunity to sit in at the staff meeting, attended also by the superintendent, Mr. Pollard, and the assistant superintendent, Mr. Garraway. This occasion revealed the co-operative relationship that exists among the members of the academic staff, and the sympathetic and united endeavours that actuate teachers, supervisors, and housemasters throughout in the desire to help these boys realize the best that is in them.

Mr. Chairman, the job of "salvaging society's seconds" is one which requires patience, perseverance, initiative, kindness, foresight and good judgment; it requires one who is dedicated to the work. Certainly we need a good vocational and industrial programme, but we must not forget that our main objective is helping the offender to solve his own problems.

The qualifications for good correctional workers, whether they be professional or lay personnel, are matters primarily of the heart and secondarily of the head; they are emotional as well as intellectual. One sees that every day throughout these institutions.

Very few people make good correctional workers—the man who is just interested in a job does not interest us, whether he be a professional or a layman. Our job is a challenging one, and we are constantly on the alert for personnel who have a keen desire to assist us in a most difficult vocation. We have vacancies on our staff for teachers, psychologists, social workers, psychiatrists, librarians and lay personnel.

It is most difficult to recruit the type of person we require. In the case of professional people, just having the academic qualifications is not good enough. Currently, we have 3 psychologists and 2 social workers, who are doing useful research with the aid of university training fellowships granted by the department.

Our staff training college for lay personnel is working at full capacity. Here, as in all other aspects of our work, the course is under constant survey and improvement. In-service training is a feature of many of our institutions, for revision and for training in specialized needs of a particular institution.

And so, Mr. Chairman, when I ask for approval of the estimates, I do so knowing full well that hon. members will indicate their confidence not only in the work we plan to do, but in our wise usage of our present resources.

During their period of incarceration, inmates need to be provided with their every necessity, completely clothed, adequately fed, provided with work and recreation, personal necessities like toothbrushes, combs and so on. All must be provided from our estimates, and all are as important as the training services we provide. All are tremendously important if we are to maintain the right atmosphere for rehabilitation work.

I think we do maintain this atmosphere, as the obvious instance of this is in the inmates' response to blood donations to the Red Cross. Most of our institutions have arrangements with the Red Cross, some are visited annually, others between two to six visits per year. Always there is a good response.

At Burwash, for instance, 700 inmates provide sufficient blood donations to meet the needs of a district with a population exceeded by 25 times the population of the industrial farm.

I have asked, Mr. Chairman, that all judges and magistrates visit our institutions at intervals. I would like them to do so, because I think they should see where they are committing those who are appearing before them as breakers of the law.

I would also like to see the hon. members make a tour of these institutions at any time they wish, or any institution they wish to see. We have nothing to hide, and the more people we have conversant with this great work, the easier it will be for The Department of Reform Institutions to carry on.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask hon. members to indicate their confidence in our work and endeavour by their approval of the estimates.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions. As I sat here listening to him, and to his remarks with respect to the fineness of the fine people who are in the institutions, and then the remark of the hon. Prime Minister who suggested that institutions, set by this province for offenders, are really almost a recreation centre, and then the remarks of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) suggesting that no one languishes within a jail in this province, I began to wonder what kind of emphasis they placed on reform. I began to wonder what kind of emphasis they placed on institutional care.

I know one thing that they stress—and I feel very strongly about this—they place far too much emphasis on institutional care and on the building of institutions.

It seems to me that it is a very poor commentary on our province, when we stand up and say with pride, "we are going to be building a new training school for girls, and a new training school for boys," as though building more and more institutions, for people to be put in, is something to be proud of.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Bigger and better.

Mr. Thompson: Bigger and better institutions.

Yet every penologist who speaks with authority, in connection with treatment, says bigger institutions are not better institutions. They should be smaller and they should be segregated.

This is really my main criticism about this government—bigger institutions, more costly for the taxpayer, are not as useful in rehabilitating the prisoner. But the government says "Let us keep on with this because it is our traditional approach. We have been doing it for a long time."

What is the situation? We are getting more overcrowding in these institutions, and I imagine we will get still much more when we emphasize the recreation and non-languishing aspects of our institutions.

Here is what this government is doing. It is costing the taxpayer of this province a good deal of unnecessary money, and it is not achieving the protection to society through putting people into institutions.

I can refer to authorities on this. I have before.

Let me just state what John McHugh, for example, has to say. He is in charge of institutions in the state of New York, he is in charge of Sing Sing, he is in charge of 21,000 prisoners. What was his reaction after his long experience? He says:

My experience with respect to institutions has convinced me that few individuals, if any, actually benefit from penal institutions.

What is the situation with our own chief probation officer under The Attorney-General's Department? He pointed out in a speech recently that 75 per cent. of the offenders who go into institutions, across the provinces, become recidivists. I know it is a better picture in Ontario, but 75 per cent. shows that the institutional treatment has not succeeded with them.

There is something very much wrong with our whole approach to reform. The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions seems to like to look across the seas towards Sweden or Norway or Holland. I noticed previous—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That was just on labour.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I know. I think the hon. Minister could also look across the seas in connection with penal reforms, sir, because here is the situation.

In Holland, 1 per cent. of the people who go into institutions return again—1 per cent. I think that when we look at all the overcrowding in our institutions that we in this province should become alarmed.

Now, I only received this annual report just as the estimates came up. I might say that I feel very strongly about receiving it so late. It is impossible under these circumstances to be able to give an honest and critical analysis of what the department is doing, in other words to perform good government and try to act like a responsible Opposition. I understand this is the objective that the hon. Prime Minister wants to permit. Therefore, I think we should get these reports sooner, so that we could study them. I have been trying to read this report, as well as to listen to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions.

I had written to him just previously, and he said I would get the report in about 10 minutes. Then I got it as he was talking. That means it is rather hard to give any kind of real appraisal of what is being done when one has to be scribbling notes, as estimates are being presented.

But I would like to say from this report that, in connection with institutions, they are overcrowded. The hon. Minister admits this. He says, in one case 30 per cent., in another case 70 per cent., in the overcrowding of our institutions.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister again, sir, why these institutions are becoming overcrowded. Why is this stream of humanity pouring into our institutions which do not give protection to society through not rehabilitating effectively the young offenders?

I thought I got a very clear indication of his philosophy, in connection with treatment, when he talked about a young boy whose father had made him kneel, and who had lashed him and beaten him.

And the question was asked of the hon. Minister, sir, what did he do about the father—the cause of this young boy's trouble? The answer came back—"I only look after the institution."

This is really what is wrong with our whole approach to reform of the individual. We have narrowed our focus purely to looking after the man's education in the institution, to feeding him in the institution, and to providing him with clothes.

But, if we are going to do a rehabilitative job with an offender, we have to realize that he comes from society and that he is going out into society. We must be looking intelligently at the causes that made him go astray in society, and by looking intelligently we will want to develop community services as well as those services in the institution itself.

We, as Liberals, believe that this government could do a great job if it were building up, first of all these preventive services in the society, not glorying only in the building of more and more costly institutions.

We believe, for example, it could be doing much more preventative work with family welfare services across this province—in other words, getting more co-operation with the whole welfare department.

Also, they should be building up probation hostels, and tying in more with The Attorney-General's Department and the probation services.

In fact, the suggestion was made by the hon. member for York Centre that there should be much more liaison and co-operation. Indeed, maybe we should consider creating a department as they have in British Columbia, a department with which I had a little bit of experience. They have a department of correction where one can have an interchange of staff with probation officers going into the institution, institutional men working in the probation field. Then all the staff know what is happening when they are working with an offender who is going to be coming out, and so on.

Well, sir, I would like to say that I do feel there are some gleams of hope and light with respect to the administration in the reform institutions. I think of the 64 people who have had training at the University of Toronto. But I also think of the 3,000 employees—if I understood the hon. Minister correctly—I realize that, after 14 years of Conservative administration, they have decided that the department will give 64 of these employees training in a broad approach to penal reform.

I congratulate the government that it has seen the light in this, and I know it is going to enlarge it, so that finally we will have a penal reform administration where the men have a philosophy and an understanding about the work they are doing.

I cannot help thinking that I should congratulate the hon. Minister also in the fact that he has abolished whipping. I say this because Ontario had a black mark on its conscience in connection with the whippings that were being administered. It was the only province which had 12 offences for which a person could be whipped. So I feel that it was a very commendable thing that the hon. Minister, this last year, suddenly realized how ineffective this was in connection with rehabilitation and has had it abolished.

I think he should also look at these large institutions—bigger and better institutions, as the hon. Prime Minister said. He should look at what penologists are saying with respect to that, and perhaps he will also see that he should be abolishing some of these large institutions and should be emphasizing small segregated units. I know that in some areas he is doing this.

I would like to talk about the staff who are in the institutions. The first thing that I would like to know, sir, from the hon. Minister—and I ask this rhetorically—is in connection with the method of recruiting his staff. If, for example, a young university graduate were going to enter this penal reform branch of the government, could he feel that, starting as a guard, he could move right up to be the superintendent? Would he have examinations? Does every man who comes onto the hon. Minister's staff have examinations before he is selected?

Why does the hon. Minister not get psychiatrists and psychologists and social workers? Is it because, within the institutions themselves, these professional people are moved into a small office somewhere, so that their philosophy and their approach is not permitted to permeate the whole staff? Did the hon. Minister inherit personnel which look on social scientists as people who are radical? Social science and its development really have never been emphasized in work with offenders, and therefore the older staff may push the psychiatrist and the social worker and the psychologist into some area which is not part of the whole approach to the institutional care, but just a separate part.

I ask that question of the hon. Minister sir, and ask how he is encouraging the administrative officers to have a broad approach to the offender? I speak of an approach that is enlightened, an approach that is in accordance with modern penology.

I also wonder, sir—and I realize that this is a difficult question—but I wonder about the training of the offender in these institutions.

The hon. Minister has emphasized the value of hard work. It seems to me that it could also be monotonous work, and not work that will be useful on the outside.

I wonder how many firms, for example, there are which are printing braille books. I wonder how many opportunities a man has, when he comes outside from an institution and is asked what his background is, and he says, "Well, I got a great deal of satisfaction because I was helping society. I have had experience in printing braille books, or in painting licence plates," or some of those other things we are doing.

I have a feeling that still there may be an emphasis on the fact that this government is wanting to pay for the institutions—thus they insure that the product of the prisoners' work in no way will offend unions or industry, but still are things that can provide remuneration for the state.

I realize that it is probably very difficult to decide what areas we can go into without being in competition with either union help or with industry itself. But I think there should always be an emphasis on trying to rehabilitate the men in work which will be applicable in the community itself.

Now, I would just like to question a little further what this government's plans are, with respect to the change which will take place, concerning responsibility of the federal government for all incarcerated persons, except those serving 6 months and less, who will still be provincial responsibility.

I still question very much whether there has been enough done with respect to alcoholic clinics. Let me take hon. members across the sea again, and this time to Norway.

In Ontario, we have 76,000 alcoholics, I understand from the alcoholic foundation. How many have we been treating? We have treated 500. How many beds have we in our clinic? I still have not had that question answered.

But in Norway where they have 40,000 alcoholics, they have 15 different institutions to treat alcoholics, and they have 800 beds.

Are we still the fastest and most developed province in connection with human betterment? I would like to see the comparison that we would make in this province, with Norway, in connection with the treatment of the offender.

Really, what I am saying is this then. We have a stream of unfortunate people who are going from society into institutions. I am suggesting that there is no reason why they should be put into the institutions. In many cases, that is the most costly approach, to have to look after the man in the institution. We have to probably look after the family, because he is a breadwinner who has been taken away from his family.

We have the situation that, if he does not rehabilitate in the institution, he may cost society as much as $25,000. That was the figure from the Archambault report in 1943, I think it was, and certainly the cost of living has now gone higher than that.

It is going to cost a small fortune to society if we are not doing the proper job. It seems to me that we are not doing the proper job if we emphasize institutional care, because we have the chief probation officer saying that 75 per cent. of the offenders, who have gone into institutions, are not reformed, they go back again.

I would suggest, sir, that on the next report there will be not such emphasis on the fact that we are going to build more and more and more institutions, but there might be even a report which will say we are closing some of our institutions. The report should read: "We have been able to get co-operation by The Department of Public Welfare and other departments, we are building up preventive community services, we are building up parole personnel, we are building up probation hostels, we are building up a great variety of services in the community, to assist offenders who do not go into the institutions, and also services to assist offenders after they leave institutions." Let us decide that we are not going to emphasize institutions as the only reform approach.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can hardly believe my ears this morning. It would be impossible to conceive of two such contrasting voices coming from the same government, within a period of 4 years, as what we have heard this morning, and what we used to hear 3 or 4 years ago, when we in the CCF raised some of the problems which are now conceded.

In fact, we have had an example of one of the most charming cases of political thievery that I have ever heard of.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Does that bother him?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister rose this morning and repeated a speech which, in good part, was the speech which I had given in 1956 in this House.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Is he not glad?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Be grateful.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, I am grateful. But before I come to that, I would just like to refer to one or two of his comments, because I think at this point we should look back a bit, as we assess where we are, so that we can be better guided as we move forward to the future.

The hon. Minister refers, for example, to the new humanitarian programme. The important word in there is "new"—new humanitarian programme. He and his predecessor, I will concede it, the now hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), were the men who started to bring in this new humanitarian programme. The hon. Minister refers—and this was from his point of view, a somewhat unhappy analogy, but I thought it was again very apt—to the great satisfaction this past year in seeing the pieces of the jigsaw coming together.

If there ever was a department which could be best illustrated by the chaos of an unassembled jigsaw over the past 5 or 6 years, it is this department. So I am glad the hon. Minister can come here and say to us that he now has the satisfaction of seeing these pieces come together.

As a matter of fact, I want to pay tribute to the hon. Minister, a very great tribute, for at least the initial portion of his remarks this morning.

Hon. J. A. Maloney (Minister of Mines): Watch the knife.

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, when I took a look at my tie rack this morning, I realized that, with Reform Institutions estimates coming, I thought I would put a striped tie on like this as a tribute to the outmoded approach of this department when they had the striped suits on the inmates.

However, I did the hon. Minister an injustice, because the hon. Minister has repeated here this morning a public proclamation of a basic change in attitude, a fundamental change in attitude.

I just want to list a few of these changes, because—while the government is patting itself on the back and being proud of its achievements—what we have seen this morning, Mr. Chairman, is a magnificent vindication of the democratic process and of the vindication of an Opposition doing a job.

I say this because what this government is doing today is what this government got up and denied with abuse, with innuendo, with personal slander that poured across the floor upon myself when I raised this in 1956. You bet it is exactly what happened.

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Hon. George Dunbar started this 10 years ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, nonsense—that hon. George Dunbar did this. The government has been dragging its feet for the last 10 years.

For example, there is the punitive approach which has characterized this department, and hon. members do not need to take my word for it. We have the association of social workers, we had many organizations interested in the field, crying out for this government to get rid of the punitive approach and get down to the basic modern treatment programme. But, for years, the government would not budge.

Now the hon. Minister gets up and talks in terms of getting away from the punitive approach. Very good. When I used to refer, for example, to a treatment programme, what was the reply from the other side of the House? The reply was that I wanted to mollicoddle these people. Now the hon. Minister gets up and mollicoddles them and the hon. Prime Minister changes his tune, and slaps the desk, and says it is a good thing. All within 4 years.

I used to describe, as a contradiction in itself, the reference to juveniles within reform institutions as incorrigible, and now we have all the hon. Ministers on the front benches—admittedly with some difficulty—trying to change the wording away from incorrigibles to what they describe as unmanageables.

Yesterday the hon. Attorney-General had even forgotten what the new word was, what the new line was, so he had to turn around and get a correction on it from the hon. Minister.

But, Mr. Chairman, the classic case is in reference to this business of excessive use of the strap. The hon. member for—

Mr. Thompson: Dovercourt.

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, if I may pause and interrupt myself here, I am delighted to hear a voice from the Liberal ranks like this, because for the past 4 years all we had was pathetic little bleats of criticism from the Liberal party—mingled, on occasion, from some like the hon. member for Brant—supporting the proposition of continuing strapping. The record is right there as clear as crystal, so we have got some new voices in the Liberal party.

Mr. Thompson: I have been inspired by my caucus.

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly not by the old part of the caucus. I would say to the hon. member over there if he continues to talk along these lines, I am going to give him an application card for membership in the new party because he certainly—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order.

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the outlook of the hon. gentleman. He got up there yesterday and referred to the great reform traditions of the Liberal party on the question of racial discrimination.

He is young enough—I hate to talk like an old man, but he is young enough not to know that not very many years ago, within living memory, men like Ian MacKenzie ran full page ads in Vancouver papers trying to arouse the yellow peril against men like Angus MacInnis and J. S. Woodsworth who were fighting for the right of Japanese Canadians.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, they want to cut this off, do they?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MacDonald: Do you want to cut this off, Mr. Chairman? You want to cut this off? Go back and consider some of the irrelevancies of the hon. Minister when he was talking.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, but the hon. member has as much respect for personal dignity and respect of the individual—

Mr. MacDonald: What is he chattering about?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, you.

Mr. MacDonald: I am talking about the Liberal party which ran full page ads provoking racial discrimination.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The hon. member is talking about people who are not even here.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yes. I have listened to the government talking about Mitch Hepburn. I am living in the past because I know the reality of what their policies are when they are in power.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, he is not making much progress with his.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, on corporal punishment, the record of this government is a record which is exceeded only by the record of the government in South Africa against the black population. This is a fact. This is a fact.

I have not got the statistics with me, but I documented it in every one of the last 4 years. When I documented it, what happened? The hon. Prime Minister rose and defended the use of corporal punishment. If we did not use it, said he, we would not have discipline in the institutions.

And what do we have this morning, Mr. Chairman? We have the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions getting up and reading letters from potentially progressive heads of institutions, who have been trying to implement modern programmes for years, but had reactionary policies imposed from above. And now they say there is no problem in discipline because we have eliminated corporal punishment.

The problem we have had for years, in trying to make progress in the field of penal reform, is the reactionary, the punitive approach which was imposed from the top, destroying the possibility of many good people within the institutions fulfilling some of the modern objectives of a modern penal reform programme. Let us face the facts and acknowledge what this government's policies have been.

Hon. Mr. Frost: A great government.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to give credit where credit is due—to the hon. Minister. I want to say this to the hon. Prime Minister, because there is nobody on the front benches who has—and here he aptly comes from Victoria—a more Victorian approach to this issue than he. All down the line, he has advocated the strapping of these lesser breeds who get in the institutions—this has been his attitude all down the line.

The man who had reformed this attitude, and I give him credit for it, is the hon. Minister. His predecessor made a start at it, but he was not there long enough until, in the game of musical chairs, he was moved on to another department. The hon. Minister's whole approach to offenders is, "These are human beings who have a potential for rehabilitation, so let us work on that potential instead of destroying it."

In fact, Mr. Chairman, in the last year we had an incident, for the second time in 10 years, which illustrated the change in policy in this government. In 1952, there was a riot in Guelph and what was the result? This government, in characteristic fashion, fastened a repressive programme upon that institution —they stepped up the lashing in the institution, as the official records will show. Yes they bashed the men around, and the word “bash” is used advisedly, in view of the men who were directing the policies of the government.

But in contrast, what happened last year?

There was another riot in Guelph, but fortunately events conspired this time to get rid of the architect of this policy. It was no coincidence that he left at just that time.

And the hon. Minister went into Guelph—and I pay glowing tribute to him because he was bucking the forces of reaction in his own party, where only a minority is in support of him.

What he is doing is an educational effort to bring the Tory party up to date—from the hon. Prime Minister down. He is like the federal hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee). Frank McGee is an educational force trying to get the Tory party up to date so we can get rid of the legalized murder known as hanging.

When a riot occurred last year, instead of the former high and mighty attitude—these are the lesser breeds, they are to blame, lash them, kind of approach—the hon. Minister went down and, with a display of courage that should be commended, he walked out into the yard and spoke to the men. He acknowledged there are some people who advocated a return to the lash or the strap. But he declared: “I do not agree with that.”

Give the hon. Minister credit, because if it had been the hon. Prime Minister, he would have said precisely the opposite. So give him credit because the biggest job he has got on his hands, Mr. Chairman, is to reform and bring up to date his own party.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Will I send over my name to the hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: Another thing, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister did at Guelph—and, quite frankly, I do not know whether this is a true story or whether it is apocryphal. But I think it is indicative of the hon. Minister's approach. He went to the superintendent and asked him to get together the inmates in the institution who came from his own constituency. And he got them in an office, and he said, “Look, I am the Minister”—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Surely he was not playing politics on that occasion, was he?

Mr. MacDonald: No, he was not.

He got these boys who came from his own far-flung constituency of Port Arthur and, in a private meeting, he said, “Forget that I am the Minister. I am a man and you are a group of inmates. Now, what the so-and-so is wrong in this institution? Just let your hair down.” They told him what they felt was wrong in the institution.

Mr. Grossman: All right then, they are happy.

Mr. MacDonald: What a striking contrast, all within 7 years, when there the last riot took place. On that occasion the men were considered completely wrong, and that this reactionary regime was completely right. This time the hon. Minister went in and credited the inmates with some intelligence, as potential human beings who could do something about it, and asked what was wrong. What was one of the results of it?

Well, as I pointed out, the architect of this reactionary policy moved on from the department, and the greatest single possibility for progress in the department was achieved.

I have said that in the last two or three years, and I was accused of pointing my finger at a civil servant, but I was making in that instance an exception, because this civil servant was the man who was creating the policy, and the government was willing to go along with it because they agreed with it. Well, good for the hon. Minister.

A lot of chickens are coming home to roost this morning, and the hon. Prime Minister needs to smile, because the smile covers up a greater pile of sins of commission and omission—

Mr. Grossman: How can he be so mad when he is agreeing with the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, this is a great government, a great government.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a story which has gotten into the public press, which is credited to the hon. Minister and therefore I think it would not be inappropriate to repeat it here—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Do not start reading any more letters now.

Mr. MacDonald: —that the hon. Minister has said that when he meets some of these boys who are unfortunate enough to have been placed in the institution, that his feeling is that, “There, but for the grace of God, might have been me.”

Mr. Chairman, there is the kind of humility that, for the first time, has been displayed by this government. In many instances, these people are unfortunate enough to have been convicted because they ran afoul of the law, the law as it now is.

As a matter of fact, if I come back to this question of white-collar crime, there are many people—if our laws were so framed as to detect and to prosecute white-collar crime—the jails would be filled, not with these common criminals but with these other types. As a matter of fact, if we had that kind of a law, when the hon. Minister went into the institution, he would have met two or three former Ministers of this cabinet.

Some hon. members: Oh, no.

Mr. MacDonald: You bet your life he would have. I say this because they fleeced the public, in one instance, of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in some instances of tens of thousands of dollars. But they did it within the framework of the law. They did it in violation of an unwritten law, and an unwritten law has no penalty clauses in it. So the hon. Minister is taking the correct approach and I give him credit—but how late in the day that this kind of attitude should have emerged.

You know, a few years ago, Mr. Chairman—I will not name the judge and I will not name the case, because it is irrelevant—but a man came before a court and was convicted of embezzling something like $1.25 million having been fleeced from the public. Because of an ingrained prejudice which sometimes occurs in judgments from the courts, the observation of the judge, after conceding that the man was guilty, was that he was not a common criminal, he was not the criminal type, so he gave him a light sentence.

What is the criminal type, the common criminal? The common criminal type, very often, is the woman who goes out and steals a 64-cent pound of butter from Loblaw's to feed her children because her husband is unemployed, so she gets a month in jail.

But the uncommon criminal type is the man who will fleece the public of millions and get away with it, because he is in an important position, a member in the cabinet.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): There is the knife.

Mr. MacDonald: You bet, and it is time we had a knife around here to deal with some of these things.

However, the hon. Minister has taken a new approach, and God bless him in taking the new approach, but I repeat, like Frank McGee, the biggest task he has is to educate his own party; and until he has his own party educated, he is still going to have a problem to realize this new approach in actual policies, and it is that I want to turn to now.

When I turn to this, Mr. Chairman—having said, and really meant everything that I said about the hon. Minister—I have a worry, a very great worry. We have swung from the repressive, bashing approach to the treating of prisoners to one of excessive sentimentalism.

We had from the hon. Minister this morning too much of what is just plain drip. For a spokesman of this government to rise, after all that we have heard from this government about these lesser breeds who should be locked up and put away as the threat to society, to now rise and refer to them as the finest of the fine—this is absurd.

Mr. Nixon: He has something there.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of thing that is going to be an obstacle to future progress, and I hope the hon. Minister can get over his sloppy sentimentalism. This is going to be an obstacle in making the progress in the future. The hon. Minister's warm humanitarian approach, in recognizing the potential of the offenders for rehabilitation is fine. But if he is going to slop with sentimentalism instead of taking a professional scientific approach, then we are not going to make much progress. And this is what we had an impressive display of this morning.

Mr. Grossman: How ridiculous can you get?

Mr. MacDonald: If we listened to the hon. member—

Mr. Grossman: Well, first he is too hard, then he is too soft.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right. First the government was too hard; now there is a possibility that the hon. Minister is going to be too soft in his approach.

However, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be sidetracked by these interjections. There are two or three points that I want to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister in general terms, and we can deal with them in detail when we get to the various estimates.

For example, the hon. Minister speaks of the importance of this department because of the number of people who are in the institutions. I am with the hon. member for Dovercourt on this. This is no matter for pride. In fact, this is one of the scandalous things that goes on in the province of Ontario.

In the province of Ontario with 6 million population, we have more people being put in our institutions than Great Britain with 8 times our population.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is something fundamentally wrong, there is something basically wrong, in a policy that is still shoving people in such numbers into institutions, and then have the hon. Minister state with pride that we are building a new institution in Lindsay, the riding of the hon. Prime Minister, and we have another one planned for Port Arthur, the riding of the hon. Minister.

Here is the old patronage, this underworld of politics creeping in once again.

Mr. Nixon: Another Minister, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not boast about the fact that this government has such a big little empire to look after, because this is one of the elements of which it should be ashamed.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister and his officials should look into this situation to find out why we have more people being put into our institutions than in Britain, though we have about one-eighth the population of Great Britain.

The second thing—and this is repeating to a degree what the hon. member for Dovercourt has said on the question of personnel. It is simply impossible, Mr. Chairman, and let us not kid ourselves for a moment, to have a modern treatment programme, if we do not have a greater professional staff at the present time. It is impossible to find out what should be done on behalf of these inmates, if we do not have psychiatrists and psychologists who are able to diagnose, with all the benefits of these modern sciences, what is wrong with an individual, and in effect to map out some sort of prescription of the kind of treatment that will meet his needs.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, under these top professionals must be social workers. I was very interested, for example, to see that a year or two ago the department turned up with a director of social work. Well, if there ever was a general without an army, he was it. And finally even the government conceded it, because it took over that position and appointed him head of one of the institutions.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Quite a difference—

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, how many social workers have we in the department—because a psychiatrist or a psychologist may diagnose what is the problem with a certain inmate, but that diagnosis is done in a few hours.

Somebody else has to carry out the treatment programme, and we have to have a second level of professional worker who can implement that programme. It cannot be left to just guards or teachers.

I submit that the social worker is just as important as the top professional people, and we have virtually no social workers in our institutions—certainly a pathetically inadequate number to be able to do the job.

The final point, of course, is with regard to the guards themselves, the general run of staff in the institutions.

On my last visit to Guelph, the thing that interested me there was that they have a school in which they train new personnel. This school is almost like a factory—there is a constant flow of trainees, because so many are leaving at the other end.

We train them and they stay for awhile, and then they leave.

In too many instances, what we have been getting is the misfit or the unemployed from the industrial world who is willing to take a gamble at it for a time, but is not suitable personnel so he leaves. Once again we must have a more scientific approach. I submit that, even with the improvements in salary, there must be greater improvements to get the right kind of people.

Mr. Chairman, the top professional person may diagnose what must be done to treat a person so that he can be rehabilitated. The social worker may conduct a programme, and may supervise it.

But the person who has the most influence in that programme, who has hour-to-hour contact with the inmates, is going to be the guard. Therefore, if the guard is not of the right type, with the right training and right outlook, the programme will not be effective. Even if the staff be a good one at the top level, or the secondary level, the programme will be frustrated at the bottom.

We must get the right kind of staff throughout, Mr. Chairman, and I suggest that we must have a new approach to our personnel needs.

Now, finally, there is the old question of rehabilitation.

I do not know when the government is going to be able to persuade their fellow Conservatives in Ottawa to move on the Fauteux commission report. The Fauteux commission report has now been available, I think, for 5 years. The Liberals sat on it for about two and a half years. The Conservatives, I will agree, have done more because they have been moving towards a solution. But I am wondering why that solution is so long postponed.

One of the problems—and I will concede this is a major problem for the hon. Minister—is that if we are going to have a new re-division of responsibility, so that everybody beyond 6 months—which in reality means beyond a year's sentence—goes into the federal institutions, and only those below 6 months remain within provincial jurisdiction, clearly we have to reassess our whole reform programme in the province of Ontario.

A reform programme that is confined to only to 6 months must be a different kind of reform programme from one that can run up to two years less one day. So this is a basic requirement that we must have.

But within that basic requirement, whenever Ottawa moves, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. Minister, the—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Well, the Minister at Ottawa said it would take 5 years to complete this work when he brought the report before the House of Commons.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Attorney-General wants to speak, let him speak later.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: He said it would take 5 years.

Mr. MacDonald: To get a decision as to the division between the two?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, to complete the work, it would take 5 years to do it.

Mr. MacDonald: To make a basic decision as to where we are going to make the division in the federal and provincial—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, it would take 5 years to implement the plan, and he started at once by appointing Mr. McLeod of his own department and Magistrate T. G. Street of Welland, and others, to get started, and they have been working very, very well ever since.

Mr. MacDonald: I will agree with the hon. Attorney-General that the details of the programme may take 5 years. But the foundation of the programme is to make up our mind whether we accept that basic recommendation, of the Fauteux commission, as to whether all inmates with sentences of less than 6 months are provincial, and all those beyond it are federal.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Has the hon. member forgotten the provincial conference where all those things were resolved?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the final point that I wanted to make, by general comment, before we get into specific estimates, Mr. Chairman, is with regard to rehabilitation.

We put a man in jail or in an institution, we spend $1,500 to $2,000 if he is in there for a year, and then we turn him out. I suggest to hon. members that our procedures in turning him out are being penny-wise and pound-foolish—because of the inadequacies and the limitations of the rehabilitation programme that is available at that point, when he must readapt himself to society once again. Far too little is done.

I want to get back to the detail of this—where this government refuses to give adequate grants to the private organizations in the field like the John Howard society and the Elizabeth Fry society, which are willing to assume much of this kind of rehabilitation work.

They sometimes can do it better than the government can, because many of these people who come out of institutions have a feeling that they do not want to have any contact with anybody in connection with the institutions. They want to put that behind them, as part of their past, to forget it. But they are willing to go to the John Howard society or to the Elizabeth Fry society to get assistance.

Therefore, I cannot understand why, in addition to stepping up their own rehabilitation programme, the government is not willing to step up, or to assist in, the development of these private rehabilitation programmes. In so doing, they will put the finishing touches to a successful reforming of people.

Now, those are my general observations, Mr. Chairman, the specific ones will emerge as we get to the various estimates.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South spoke of the rehabilitation programme of the Elizabeth Fry and the John Howard societies. I will speak about another organization just for a few minutes. There is a specific grant that is in here in item No. 10, $25,000 to the Salvation Army for their work.

Now, we will see what will come out of that, and I will quote just for a few moments from an article:

As the burden of taxation increases from year to year, it is refreshing to realize that the picture is not altogether gloomy. Thanks to certain organizations which are busily engaged in trying to undo a little of the damage brought about by the frightful inroads made into mankind by intoxicating liquors, something is salvaged.

The Salvation Army, among these societies, by the grace of God and due to the tireless work of devoted men and women has tangible evidence of some saving of money, quite apart from the unseen yet nonetheless vital work of character building, home saving and heart lifting.

The latest report from the Harbour Light, to mention only one such institution, contains the startling statement—

Now this, Mr. Chairman, is the startling statement and, when put against the amount of $25,000 that we are giving, it is a startling statement—

—we claim a saving of over $1 million to the Ontario government in the last 5 years.

On the face of it, this might seem to be a rather audacious claim. But as the picture presented by the report unfolds it is, to say the least, a conservative one. It is based simply upon the savings effected through the re-establishment in society of some 415 men—

Now we are getting down to facts, 415 men,

—since the centre opened.

These men have spent an average of 20 months in jail or about 600 jail days. These periods, reckoned at $4.50 a day, gives a total of $2,700 per patient, and multiplying this figure by 415 gives the accumulated amount.

Now, it said this was a conservative figure, and I find that it really is. I say this because, in inquiring into the department what the cost per day is, I find it is closer to $5 a day.

Now this, as I said, is a very modest amount, $4.50. But on top of this there is the cost of the court when these men were arrested and processed through the court, the welfare to the family while they were in jail, and the loss of income that these men have lost, had they been gainfully employed.

Now, in addition to this, there are 400 men who have been aided through an out-patient clinic during the same period, in this same institution, by the same organization—400 men who are being processed and aided through their out-patient department. And this is only the one institution, the one in Toronto, I am talking about. There are many, many of them spread over the province, and this is here in Toronto.

Now, what have the other centres in Ontario accomplished? I am sure it would be a very interesting thing to know just what has been the overall saving to the people of Ontario.

Now, after giving the experience, or rather the result, of the work of this organization, does this government feel that $25,000 is enough? There is a saving of $1 million in one portion alone, in Ontario, in 5 years. Does the hon. Minister think $25,000 is enough for this institution, for what they are doing?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I will say that the Salvation Army is outstanding. We have constantly sought their advice on different things. They have collaborated with us very well and that grant has progressed and been added to each year. Do not forget that The Department of Public Welfare makes a tremendous contribution to them as well.

Mr. Gordon: Contribution to the department of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes, I know, but that is an overall picture they are giving there, I think, and The Department of Public Welfare is making great contributions, as I think the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) will tell the hon. member, as well as our own department.

Mr. Gordon: Now, we have just had this report placed on our desks, and just turning to the report, we find that this organization that I have just been speaking about, on their police court and their rehabilitation work with prisoners, have a deficit of $68,000. And in their report to The Department of Reform Institutions, Mr. Chairman, there is a paragraph here:

We acknowledge with sincere appreciation the financial support given by the provincial government, and trust that in view of our ever-enlarging service our greater needs may be remembered.

They are praying for the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Very nice of them indeed.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say a few words on this matter.

I do appreciate the hon. member for York South drawing comparisons backwards and forwards between what went on previously in this jurisdiction and other jurisdictions with the Conservative party, with the Liberal party.

But I wonder if he remembers or would like to be reminded of a former House leader of the party he represents, who sat in this House—a chap by the name of Bill Grummett—and his theory about criminology and reform institutions was that there should be a woodshed in connection with every court, and that it should be used frequently.

Mr. Grossman: Shame, shame.

Mr. Singer: It was said here in this House, it was said in committees, it was said outside the House.

Mr. Grossman: Shame.

Mr. Singer: I think when the hon. member for York South, Mr. Chairman, is so desirous of keeping everything straight and everything consistent, and everything on the record—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, let him keep this straight—

Mr. Singer: —that he should remember that the chap who sat in his place not too long ago was a very strong disciplinarian, who thought that corporal punishment should never be abolished and should be continued in our penal system.

Mr. Grossman: The halo is getting tighter.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I think it is perhaps appropriate that this debate on these estimates takes place today, following on the heels of a meeting held by the Metropolitan Toronto health and welfare committee. They were discussing yesterday several problems about drug trafficking and jails, and this matter is reasonably fully reported here in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning.

I was interested in the hon. Minister's remarks when he talked about the 40 girls at Mercer who have received treatment. I think he indicated that only a very small proportion of them came back to jail, but he did not tell us how many of these 40 addicts had been cured.

I think this is important, because if there is a system, then the government is just nibbling, it has just begun to put its little toe into the water, is just starting to look at this very serious problem. It has not even got a follow-through, because if the hon. Minister had a follow-through, he would undoubtedly have given that information to us this morning.

How many of those girls, those 40 addicts who were treated, were in fact cured? How many beds are available for alcoholic treatment? That is a figure that we have been trying to get for a long time here.

There is nothing revealed in the public accounts. The hon. Minister of Health has indicated that, somewhere in his maze of figures, maybe there is some indication of it, but we cannot seem to get a breakdown. The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions does not give us any answer.

These are things that should begin to come out in light of the overall problem.

Mr. Chairman, there are several quotations in this article here this morning that I think are important, and to which the hon. Minister should pay very substantial attention. This article says:

Metro Chairman Gardiner yesterday said he favours a substantial investment by Metro in a hospital for the treatment of addicts if federal and provincial government would join in such a project.

Surely from this hon. Minister, or from the hon. Minister of Health, or perhaps from the hon. Prime Minister, we should be beginning to get some sort of an answer about what the province really is doing about the treatment of drug addicts. There is just this nibbling, there are no up-to-date statistics, and there is no record to show what achievement they have made.

At the same time, Mr. Gardiner is quoted as having said the federal government would have to amend the criminal code to give courts power to sentence addicts to an indeterminate term, for their rehabilitation within the hospitals.

Has the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions suggested this sort of a step to the hon. Attorney-General? Has the hon. Attorney-General made such representations to the Minister of Justice? If not, why not?

These are things, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions should be paying some attention to. Rehabilitation does not count until we have a place to put the people who need to be rehabilitated. And this is the thing that the hon. Minister should be talking about, rather than the bigger and newer and more elaborate institutions that he is building up.

Metro welfare and health committee members listened in shocked silence as David Dougall, governor of the Metro jail, said that drug addicts make contact with their suppliers in the city hall bullpen. Police have been unable to keep up with the ingenious methods addicts use to get their supplies.

These are things, Mr. Chairman, that the great wealth of talent in the front rows here should be coping with, and then perhaps they would not have to give such a big job to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions.

Dealing a little more closely with some of the things about which the hon. Minister shows concern, Mr. Dougall admitted that he was now going to do something about improving the primitive toilet facilities in the two segregated cells in the Don jail, consisting merely of holes in the floor, and that at long last they were going to be replaced with aluminum fixtures.

In this new and modern jail of the hon. Minister who runs his department so well, how could this situation have been allowed to be created in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Oh, no, the city of Toronto.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister's predecessor opened the new wing of that jail, and I was there and he took great credit upon himself for the marvellous contribution the province had made. If the hon. Minister had been there—and he should have been there—he would have seen these things and been able to do something about them.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Where? When was this?

Mr. Singer: When the new wing of the Don jail was opened a year and a half ago.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I was not even around here then.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister was in the House.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I know, but I had nothing to do with reform institutions.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister must have seen the records.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The first time I saw those two holes was the other day, and the directive went out to fix them. They are not as the hon. member suggests. They are not too bad, but I do not like them myself any more than he does.

Mr. Singer: Well, obviously they are not too good. The hon. Minister could not have thought they were too good or he would not have sent out a directive.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: No, they are not. They are the only two left, and now they are corrected.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Dougall made another point of which I think the hon. Minister should be aware. He said that at the present time he has no authority to send a drug addict to a hospital for rehabilitation.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister is interested in treating drug addicts and providing methods and systems for rehabilitating these people, surely there is something that can be done right here in this House to provide authority to Mr. Dougall to send these people to proper places where they will get treatment.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: We have them.

Mr. Singer: Well, why did Mr. Dougall say yesterday to this responsible committee of the Metropolitan Toronto council that he has no authority to send people to hospitals for rehabilitation?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Until they are committed by the courts. He has not the authority. That is the hon. member's job as a lawyer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. Minister is just running around in circles. Here is his responsible official, who says he does not have authority. Here is a matter now being raised in the House, and the hon. Minister says there is no problem.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, they are not convicted.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister should get together with these people and find out whether Mr. Dougall has a problem or not.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: That is up to the legal profession. The hon. member is a lawyer.

Mr. Singer: Surely, Mr. Chairman, if these men—particularly the hon. Minister who has this responsibility—can accept the responsibility let them do something about it, or say that the hon. Minister has no intention of doing it, there is no point in his trying to slough off his responsibility on the legal profession or any other profession.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, just a moment, allow me to say something for a moment on a personal privilege.

This situation—these people in the Don are not convicted of drug addiction, they are waiting there, a lot of them, to be sentenced and so on. If it is requested that they come to us, they go to the Mercer where we have plenty of facilities and will look after them.

At the Don jail, if hon. members have ever been down there, they will know there is a hospital there, with specialists, doctors and everybody else looking after them. I was down there the other day and saw them, and I would like the hon. member to go down himself and see what facilities are there.

Mr. Singer: I have been there.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: They are very much up to date.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting to hear the hon. Minister say that there is no problem. I would suggest that since he has this official, Mr. Dougall, who comes under his authority and control, that Mr. Dougall and he should get together at the earliest possible opportunity and see whether the hon. Minister can remove Mr. Dougall's doubts as to the proper way of getting this thing under control.

Insofar as there being adequate facilities, the hon. Minister said that there were 40 girls treated in Mercer last year, and as I pointed out he did not say how many were cured, but in this report—I had it here a minute ago—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Can anybody say a drug addict is cured at any time?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): No.

Hon. Mr. Frost: This is a lawyer's statement—

Mr. Singer: On page 19 of the report, item No. 5, it shows that there were 219 addicts in the institutions last year. Well, if only 40 of the 219 were in fact treated, I think that is a pretty shameful record.

One more quote here from Mr. Gardiner, the Metropolitan chairman, and I am sure the hon. Prime Minister is very interested in his remarks:

Mr. Gardiner said it was up to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Fulton, the Attorney-General, Mr. Roberts, and Metro to work out some system whereby a known addict could be sentenced to an indeterminate term and placed in a hospital.

Now, here is the man who has been charged with the responsibility in this large Metropolitan area of working it out. He says here, and it is quoted in the press, he said the 3 authorities should get together, obviously he is willing to do it. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is up to the hon. Minister, the hon. Attorney-General, and the hon. Prime Minister to get this sort of thing underway, and get a proper treatment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure. We are the very people who can do it. There is no doubt that we are the people who can do it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Let me say this. Does the hon. member not know that my department does not fix sentences? We only carry out the sentence imposed by the court. Did the hon. member not know that we cannot compel an addict to take treatment? It has to be voluntary, and we have nothing in our statutes to say we can compel them to take it. That is why we have 40 out of 219.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It has to be in the criminal code.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, may I read this last quotation again?

Mr. Gardiner said it was up to Justice Minister Fulton and Attorney-General Roberts and Metro to work out some system whereby a known addict could be sentenced to an indeterminate term and placed in a hospital.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member did not say that before.

Mr. Singer: I read it exactly that way, and if the hon. Minister had been listening then he would have understood it. Now, that is the problem. The hon. Minister recognizes that is the problem. What is going to be done about it by the hon. Minister on that side of the House?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would like to reiterate that it is a matter of record that this government two years ago, while I was Minister of Reform Institutions, made representation to Ottawa that the indeterminate sentence should be maintained, because we felt it was a very valuable method of keeping track of those patients who had had at least preliminary treatment.

The hon. member no doubt knows also that it was a recommendation of the Fauteux report that the indeterminate sentence should be abolished.

This government, as I have already said, did make representation that this recommendation be not implemented.

To say that only 40 out of 219, I believe was the figure, were given treatment is, I think, a very, very fine record indeed. It is very difficult to get even that high a percentage of addicts—and alcoholics may be included in this—to accept treatment.

Treatment, Mr. Chairman and hon. members, is of no value whatsoever unless one has complete and total co-operation of the patient.

There is no use of us saying, or legislating, that every drug addict must take treatment. We are keeping them away from drugs while they are under our care. But just as soon as they go out, if they have not the will or the desire to ask or seek treatment which is made available to them, all the legislation that we can put on the books is completely and totally worthless.

I would say that 40 out of 219 is rather a good figure. To say that no note has been taken of how many were cured is ridiculous in the extreme, Mr. Chairman. I say this very, very sincerely and very, very kindly.

We do not know when an addict is cured, I say that very frankly. We accept I think a 5-year cure period. We can never be sure that the addict has been cured, even if he does stay away from drugs for 5 years, or for any arbitrary time.

One of the great problems of the addict, and this does not only apply to drug addicts; alcoholics are very much the same way, just as soon as he or she is faced with a problem more than he can deal with, he turns to drugs or alcohol, as an escape hatch, if you will. It is in many cases an escape, and they turn to it; therefore, it is ridiculous to say they have been cured.

One of the biggest and best projects in the world, I think, is in Kentucky. There was a good series of articles written about it which appeared in that very fine journal, the Toronto Daily Star, with which I think the hon. members opposite are very familiar.

It was a series of very well prepared articles, I think Ron Haggart was the author; I think it is one of the finest series on this problem that has ever appeared in a daily journal.

I think if the hon. members would read that, they would get perhaps a more readily understandable insight—for the layman—into this problem than anything we might put on paper.

This drug addiction is a terrific problem. We are very frank to tell you, Mr. Chairman, we do not know the answers yet. We are groping in this, as medical science is groping in many similar fields, not because we are the Conservative party, but every jurisdiction in the world is groping with this problem. We, as they, are doing everything we possibly can, I think, to find some reasonable answer to it.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, just a few words in reply to the hon. Minister. I commend him for what he has said so frankly and so sincerely. I have read those articles. I think they were an excellent set of articles. But the point I was making this morning, Mr. Chairman—the point I think is important—is that, if there is an approach being made, and it is not an obvious approach or it is not a simple approach to this problem, then the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions should not put in, as a part of his report, some broad general statements that we have the thing well in hand and everything is rosy. It is not rosy, and what the hon. Minister of Health said this morning is absolutely correct.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I would deny that I made any such statement. I realize, the same as the hon. Minister of Health, the enormity of this problem, how complex it is.

I have sat and talked with drug addicts in my institutions time after time. I realize their problems. Some of them do not want to be cured, and this is something that will take many, many years, as the hon. Minister of Health has said, to correct.

But we are trying to make a progressive step in that direction, and one that we hope to enlarge on from year to year, hoping that it will bring eventual success.

But we are certainly making a very definite try, and we have very dedicated skilled people in charge of that programme.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, with regard to item No. 10, the hon. member for Brantford has raised the question of the Salvation Army and has made a plea for the government investing a little more than the $25,000, because that investment would bring back a great saving to the government itself.

I want to take the next item, prisoners' rehabilitation societies: I presume this includes the John Howard society and the Elizabeth Fry society. Will the hon. Minister tell me how that breaks down, as between the two organizations?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is $10,000 to one, and $13,000 to the other.

Mr. MacDonald: How does 10 and 13 add up to $26,500?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, we are reading last year's—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: John Howard is $16,000; and Elizabeth Fry $9,500—$9,000 in Toronto and another $1,500 in Ottawa—a total for the Elizabeth Fry of $10,500.

Mr. MacDonald: That at least gets our mathematics correct, because we are now up to $26,500.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister if this represents an increase over last year.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Of how much?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It is $3,000 for the John Howard, $1,500 for the other—$4,500 in all.

Mr. MacDonald: $4,500 in all.

Well, Mr. Chairman, just let me draw this to the government's attention—$4,500 is what this government would have to spend if they had 3 people in an institution for a year. Three people.

Hon. Mr. Frost: These people are satisfied with this.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Of course they are.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not satisfied. I have a letter right here from the Elizabeth Fry society which is requesting an increase, for a reason that I want to get into in a moment, and the same thing is true of the John Howard society.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, they do not come to us.

Mr. MacDonald: May I speak, Mr. Chairman, or does the hon. Prime Minister have the floor? Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The sum of $4,500 is the equivalent of what it would cost to keep 3 people in an institution for a year.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, we do not have to get on our knees and beg for a little common sense from the front benches over there. If these people can keep 3 people from being repeaters—and our record of people coming out of the institutions is that from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. of them become repeaters—if they can keep 3 of them from becoming repeaters, they will have saved the increase that has been given this year.

I say this because many offenders themselves are interested in getting rehabilitation from a private organization rather than the government.

Why is the government so niggardly in terms of making a contribution that would make it possible for these organizations really to do a job?

In the case of the Elizabeth Fry society, if the hon. Prime Minister is not aware of it, I would draw this to his attention.

During the past year, as the result of the failure to meet the quota in the community chest drive, the Elizabeth Fry society got something like $2,000 less than what was allotted to them in the division of the community chest. They pointed this out in a letter to each of the party leaders.

I suppose if the Treasury board has cracked the whip for this year, this is all we are going to get. But I repeat and I say it, that the government is being penny-wise and pound-foolish. By devoting a little bit more money, a few tens of thousands of dollars more money, it would come back a hundredfold in terms of keeping people out of institutions, because it would assist in rehabilitating them.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Brantford has been speaking about the Salvation Army Harbour Light clinic, and the hon. member for York South has been talking about the Elizabeth Fry society.

Naturally, these organizations themselves always feel the need for more funds, as they should. It is their duty to do so.

But I should point out to the House, through you, Mr. Chairman, that the Salvation Army is building a much larger, better and brand new Harbour Light clinic on Jarvis Street. They are continuing to do a good job. They still need more money, but they at least are expanding.

The Elizabeth Fry society in just the last few weeks has, for the first time, been able to buy premises of their own for a new hostel here in Toronto.

These two instances alone certainly should point out that these two organizations are not bankrupt by any means. They are doing a good job. They need more money, and they are expanding greatly.

Vote 2001 agreed to.

On vote 2002:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I have been elected as a representative to ask questions, and I hope I will be permitted to do that.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions if, in parole supervision, he places sole emphasis on the two organizations, the John Howard and the Elizabeth Fry. My understanding is that neither of these organizations covers comprehensively the whole province. Their main centres are in Toronto.

Therefore, there may be a tendency, if we are going to have parole by these organizations, that we are drawing the ex-offender into the city.

What other organizations does the hon. Minister use, and what grants does he give to other organizations that provide parole supervision?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, to answer that, Mr. Chairman, I might say that, of course, our greatest expenditure and the stress we put is on our own parole and rehabilitative services.

We appreciate the great work that is being done by the Salvation Army, the John Howard society, the Elizabeth Fry society, all these Rotary clubs.

It might be surprising for hon. members to know the tremendous help that businessmen in different industries are in phoning to us and saying, "If you have men who are looking for work, we will take a certain number, and nobody will know who they are or where they came from."

We get help from all organizations. But we feel that our department should depend chiefly on our own parole and rehabilitation men, because they are the skilled people who chiefly look after these things.

Mr. Thompson: How many parole men are there, and do they cover the province?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Parole, 18; placement, 14.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on vote 2002, has the government appointed a chairman to the parole board?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the government contemplating the appointment of a chairman to the parole board?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: As soon as the Act is proclaimed and acquiesced to by the Lieutenant-Governor, thought will be given to that.

Mr. MacDonald: Can the hon. Minister give the House assurance that, in appointing a man to an important position, the position will be advertised to the civil service commission and the best possible person will be chosen?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We will give consideration to that, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Will it be done through the civil service commission and advertising of the post?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We will consider that at the time.

Mr. MacDonald: Will the hon. Prime Minister do it, or is he just going to consider it and dismiss it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We will consider it.

Mr. MacDonald: This is his procedure, Mr. Chairman; the hon. Prime Minister says his procedure is to advertise through the civil service commission. Is this what he is going to do on this occasion?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We will consider it.

Mr. MacDonald: Just mark this, because we will come back to it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the employees for the institutions, do they all go through an examination in order to be accepted, and do they go through the civil service commission?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes. That was a question, Mr. Chairman, that I was going to answer—that the hon. member for Dovercourt asked before. All these promotions that can be made are made within our own ranks.

He asked that question. Ability and application and integrity are the 3 things taken into consideration, and all new hirings and so on are done through the civil service commission.

I made a mistake, Mr. Chairman, on those parole and placement officers. I have just been handed the correct figure by my chief parole and probation officer. We have 25 parole officers and 16 placements. I was too low in my figure before.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clear a point with the hon. Minister in regard to employment of personnel. Two years ago, there was a chap who took on a position at the new training school. He was hired, he was on that job for, I believe, two weeks, and then he was let go. He had a good record with the Navy, but he was told by the head of the department that he had a tendency to be too stout. In the light of what has happened in the past year with these different departments of the government, what standards does the hon. Minister have with regard to the type of individual? This man was hired, and then he was let go. I think that when a man is hired in the first place, unless there is something to do with his character, he should have an understanding that when he is hired he should remain on as a permanent employee.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I think that is correct. I do not think that just because a person is too stout he should be fired. He should be given a certain time to get that weight off. At one time I weighed 210 pounds and now I weigh 165 pounds.

Mr. L. Trotter (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister a question?

In regard to the salaries paid to matrons and senior matrons, could he give me some idea just what their salary is?

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister thinks we are going to finish these in a few minutes, I would like to disagree—we are only now starting at—

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right. If there are a number of questions, I would say that I would move that the committee rise and report certain resolutions.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: In answer to the hon. member's question first, the matron's range is $3,240 to $3,750.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions, begs leave to sit again, and moves the adoption of the report.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, I will say that on Monday we meet at 2 o'clock. I had proposed to go ahead with the estimates of The Department of Health. On the other hand, the balance of the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions is not too lengthy, and I would be inclined to clean them up before going into The Department of Health, but that is not mandatory. We could take them after The Department of Health.

If any time should remain, there are items on the order paper that I would want to clear up, and there is always hanging over us the budget debate.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): And the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I know, but that is different. The hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) and I have that completely under control.

On Tuesday there will be the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, and also those other items that I have mentioned previously.

For the benefit of the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) I would say to him that my thoughts in the meantime have crystallized.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): I am glad to hear that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have been able to clarify my thinking after the busy session, and after last night's busy session, and I think it is necessary to have a night session on Thursday night.

Mr. Reaume: Well, that is the Irishmen's holiday. That is a bad day to have it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right then, I will reconsider that. I will think that over over the weekend. It might be possible to work that on Wednesday night by the Legislature convening at 8 o'clock on Wednesday, because I do not think there are any sessions of committees on Wednesday night.

But in any event, there are night sessions on Monday and Tuesday, and we will hold the rest in abeyance.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion, I have a notice that the standing committee on health, which was to meet on Monday at 11 a.m., has been postponed until further notice.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.10 of the clock, p.m.

Orders of the day.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg your indulgence, and the indulgence of the hon. members of this House, while I make reference to a celebration which is of great significance to a group of Canadians of considerable importance in this community. I refer to those of Hungarian origin. The Hungarian communities of the free world are celebrating Hungarian National Day.

The story of Hungarian National Day would, of course, not be whole or complete without reference—considerable reference—to that great champion of liberty, Louis Kossuth. Kossuth's name is now a by-word for liberty not just to Hungarians; it is known all over the world as a name which sparked a whole people to fight for its national independence and which still, at its mention, sends a thrill of pride coursing through the veins of all Hungarian patriots and freedom lovers all over the world.

Hungary became a modern constitutional state in 1848, but it was the beginning of a grim period in which the Magyars were called upon to prove their ability to defend, with their lives, their newly-won liberty.

It is fitting, too, at this time to commemorate the death of another great Hungarian, Count Szechinyi who, despite differences with Kossuth, fought a good fight for independence in his own way as he saw his duty. It is 100 years almost to the day that Count Szechinyi died.

In reading the history of those momentous years of 1848 and 1849, one is struck by certain rather striking parallels between that period and the 1956 revolution. The great historian, Armenius Vambery says of the spring of 1849:

—and the civilized world spoke with sympathy and respect of the Hungarian people who had singularly shown their ability to defend their liberties, constitutional and national existence.

How reminiscent of 1956 that is!

What a striking similarity there is also in the fact that then, as in recent years, when victory over the enemy—at that time, the Austrian Crown—was in sight, 200,000 Russians crossed the Hungarian border and joined with Hungary's other enemies in breaking the back of the great Hungarian revolution. Hungary has had her back broken a number of times. But the whole world knows that, in all her tragic history, Hungary's spirit was not, and is not now, broken.

The Hungarian spirit is strong and will so remain. I know I speak for all the hon. members of this Legislature when I express the wish that, in the not-too-distant future, the tyrant's grip over Hungary will be broken, and Hungary will again be free, and the spirit of Louis Kossuth will once again be present within the walls of a free Hungarian Parliament.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the sentiments of my party with respect to Hungarian National Independence Day. I think that we all recognize the history of Hungary and the fierce love of freedom which has flowed in the veins of Hungarians for many years. I think we all know of the two remarkable revolutions which took place against tremendous odds. Some people may suggest that perhaps, particularly the 1956 revolution, might have been in vain. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it was in vain. I think that it convinced the conscience of the free world of the sinister threat of communism, of the sinister threat of tyranny. I think that the Hungarian revolution illustrated to the free world that they must maintain vigilantly their basic freedom, and that also they have an obligation to their brothers behind the iron curtain.

I think, sir, that the history of Hungary has always been a challenge to free men and women, showing that not only in every man does the desire for freedom live, but also that there is the obligation to insure that there is freedom for all men. As long as there are a few people enslaved, we all have the obligation, both to them, and also to insure that this does not happen to us.

I take great pride as a member of the Liberal party, the party which, when it saw the Hungarian situation, welcomed the gallant freedom fighters to this country without any hesitation.

We are proud of the contribution that these men and women are making across Canada, and we are proud of the emphasis that they are still placing, even though they have reached safety, on the fact that they have not forgotten the plight of their own country.

I think that yesterday's celebration of Hungary's Independence Day did a number of things. It aroused the conscience of Canadians to the obligation which they have in order to pursue vigorously the aim that all nations shall be free. And I think, sir, it also in some way sent a message to the Hungarians who now are under the harsh yoke of communism. It sent a message to them that they are not forgotten, and that we are all pursuing a vigorous policy to the aim that one day the free flag of Hungary will fly again.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, without repeating at length the sentiments which have been so ably expressed by the hon. members for St. Andrew and Dovercourt, I would like to join with them in tributes to our fellow Canadians of Hungarian descent on this, the occasion of the Hungarian Independence Day. One of the poets, some years ago put the fight for freedom rather aptly. He said that "freedom's battle once begun, bequeaths from bleeding sire to son, though battled or wronged is ever won." And I think perhaps in the history of no nation in recent years has this statement been vindicated more completely. I would like to join with the other two hon. members in expressing our tribute to the Hungarian Canadians on this occasion.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I just take a moment of your time and the time of this House. In listening to the remarks of the hon. members preceding me, and having attended yesterday afternoon with the hon. member for St. Andrew the public meeting at which Canadians of Hungarian origin expressed their sentiments upon the occasion of these two great days, I cannot help but recall that, some 3 years ago, I stood in this Legislature and told this House, of perhaps what will for me be the outstanding experience of my life. I was sent by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), on behalf of the government of Ontario, to see at first hand, and to report on, the amazing and outstanding courageous episodes that were taking place along the Austrian border as the hundreds of thousands of refugees were crossing.

Surely the people of Canada can be very well proud of the part they played. Certainly the people of Ontario, under the leadership of this government, can well be proud of the assistance they rendered, in helping some 37,000 of these noble people to come to this land.

The meeting yesterday was held in a theatre in the riding of St. Andrew, and there several thousands of people remembered that great day on behalf of those who, because of the iron curtain, are not able to do so.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make a brief statement because I think it is a matter of public concern.

I would like to comment on the press report having to do with the supervision of a vote for the election of officers of local 938 of the international brotherhood of teamsters. This local has been a trusteeship for about a year, and the trustee appointed by the international union is Mr. J. J. Crompton.

The other night when I arrived home, I was communicated with by some member of the press, advising me that my people were going to supervise the vote of this local. I immediately indicated that I would not agree that that should take place. I was making a very snap decision, as the hon. members will understand. Although this matter had been discussed in my department, up to that time—because of the busy term we have been having—I had not taken this question under advisement.

Now, as to my policy, and I am making this statement in view of an editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning—which I do not have with me, so I cannot read it—but I know that most hon. members have seen it. It was rather uncomplimentary, but that really does not matter to me because I know this gentleman down there writes a lot of stuff that he does not really understand much about.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I have been here quite a few years now, and I do not think I have ever had anything complimentary said about me anyway.

But, I would just like to say that this question is not a simple one.

I would say at the outset that it is my policy, in administering this Department of Labour, to keep it free from internal administration of unions. We often have requests made to do certain things that I think would involve the department in the internal administration, and would lead to a great deal of difficulty.

If I do say so myself, Mr. Speaker, I think that The Department of Labour, at this moment, stands rather high in the estimation of both labour and management in this province. We have endeavoured to follow an impartial path, and to be of service where it is deemed advisable to be so, and I want to keep that prestige high. I want to keep it just the way it is today.

Now, this matter involves what sounds a very simple thing. It is to supervise a vote within this industry. I have had only a brief time to prepare this, because I was advised that a question would be asked, and I tried to gather a little bit of data to answer the question.

But this would involve 13 voting areas across this province. There will be 13 polling booths established, which would require 15 men, at least, to carry out the wishes of this union.

Now, we do not have 15 men available. Some of them would have to travel to the extreme north and east and west of this province and to be gone for several days. It would take every available man from the conciliation services who could be spared, who was not actually tied up with work at the moment.

It would take a great number of our factory inspectors, whom we would have to call upon to assist them.

And in Toronto here, for instance, polling booths will be open from Sunday to Thursday.

Because of the nature of the work of these men, they are out on the highways, and they have to keep these booths open a longer time than would normally be expected to take a vote.

So, as we can see, it is not just a simple thing of supervising an election in an industry. This is province-wide.

But the thing that concerns me is the question of how much should we get involved in this sort of thing. How much should The Department of Labour accept responsibility for, in conducting this sort of thing, and where would it end?

Now, suppose the lumber and saw mill workers wanted us to conduct a vote across the province, how are we going to be able to refuse one and grant it to the other?

But I am going to say this, that I have been greatly concerned about the turbulence here in this particular field of industry. If some extra help from me and my department would bring about a better understanding within the industry, and would tend to eliminate some of the difficulties that have beset them over a long period of years, I would certainly be most happy to do it.

And so I say, in view of the fact that this is a very unusual case, in view of the fact that it is highly necessary that this industry be assisted to avoid this disruption that takes place from time to time, continuously almost, and is something that has given me and my department great concern, I am going to say this, that I am going to take this matter under advisement.

I would not want to close the door until I have fully considered the question. I have already said that we will not do it. But on further consideration, if I felt that this is the answer to some of the problems that confront this great trucking teamsters industry, then I would be prepared to go a long way to eliminate it. But I would not think that it would be a good thing for The Department of Labour to enter into this field, only in very exceptional cases.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Has the time been set for the taking of the vote?

Hon. Mr. Daley: How is that?

Mr. Nixon: Has the time been set by the union for the taking of the vote?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Now, yesterday I did agree to let my people supervise the nominations for election. Before the nominations took place there already had been one man, who figured that he was a good contender, who was eliminated by some process within the union for non-payment of dues or something of that nature. I do not know what it was for sure, or the circumstances involved.

But I did agree to let my people, 13 of them, go out and supervise the nominations. They had no part to play in it other than to be there, and to see that everything was in order at each one of these 13 polling booths.

Now, the elections are to take place. I do not think the date has actually been set yet, but it will be in about 3 weeks.

Now that, as I have already pointed out, involves about 15 of my people for about 3 or 4 days all over this province, but I am not concerned about that. I think we could handle that phase of it. But what I am concerned about is how far we should go in the internal administration of unions.

Mr. J. A. Fullerton (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. members the brochure placed on the desks. These have been printed by the Elliot Lake Standard, the newspaper at Elliot Lake, and presented through the courtesy of the chamber of commerce at Elliot Lake.

I am sure this is very enlightening information, and trust that the hon. members will get some very good information from it. I would particularly draw to the attention of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) that the picture on the inside back cover was a loss leader—a one-cent sale on eggs.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the annual report of The Department of Highways of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that the hon. Prime Minister is presently presenting the submission of the government of Ontario to the Royal commission on transportation. I believe that each of the hon. members has a copy of this submission on his desk.

Hon. Mr. Allan moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF REFORM INSTITUTIONS

On vote 2003:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, this estimate covers all of the institutions, and there are two or three of them on which I wanted to raise a point. But before that, there is a general observation with regard to one group of personnel in the department. I am wondering if the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope) is aware of the degree of unrest that is now the case in their ranks. I am referring to teachers in the various reform institutions.

My information is that, in other provincial institutions that have teachers—coming under The Department of Education or The Department of Health—they have discovered that they cannot, in view of the normal practices in the teaching world of the teaching term being some 10 months, get adequate numbers of qualified teachers to work on a 12-month basis with no more than the two or three weeks for holidays.

But in The Department of Reform Institutions, the practice is to hire the teacher for the 12-month period with just a normal holiday.

Therefore, there is a coming and going of teachers, making it extremely difficult to maintain staff—particularly staff of the calibre that is required to do a job.

Now, has the hon. Minister, or has the department, given any consideration to doing what all other departments of government have had to do, and that is to acknowledge that, if teachers are going to do an adequate job, they require the two-month period for refresher courses, plus holiday, and that otherwise their contribution as teachers during the remainder of the year is going to be a much poorer one?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that the hon. member brought this to my attention. It has been a problem. I would say that there is some dissatisfaction on the part of our teachers, and concern on my own part. At the moment, there are 3 departments before the civil service commission with some suggestions for an alteration in salary; that is The Department of Health, my own department, and I think the other department is Education.

But I agree with my hon. friend that our teachers have, I believe, a much more serious position in the teaching world than ordinary teachers. They have a longer season, they are constantly—day and night—with these boys and girls in the training schools. Not only do they have to teach them the basic educational courses, but they must try to instil in them an education as far as character building is concerned.

To my way of thinking, it is a very specialized form of teaching. As far as I am concerned, I might say to the hon. member that it will be my endeavour to progressively better their conditions, because I do want to see teachers of a very high calibre in those boys' and girls' schools.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, under salaries, I am interested in knowing if there are any full-time psychiatrists on the staff for the many thousands of people who are in the jails?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I want to say to my hon. friend that we have no full-time psychiatrists at all, we have psychologists. We have 11 part-time psychiatrists and 11 psychologists, 3 of which are part time and 8 full time. Every institution is well looked after, as far as psychiatry and psychology are concerned. But we do not have full-time men.

They are the most difficult people to get. There is such a call for their services that we have had a most difficult time getting them.

We have at the head of our psychologists a man, I think, who is recognized to be one of the most capable men in this Dominion or any place. I am referring to Professor Frank Potts. He is the head of those services, and he is constantly trying to enlist more full-time men into our field. We hope that it will progress in that way.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister a question on the subject? On page 21 of the annual report, in dealing with the personnel, it lists one psychiatrist, at Millbrook. Then the hon. Minister just stated that he did not have any. Is that one psychiatrist still there?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is Dr. Webb my hon. friends refers to. He spends part time at Millbrook, part time in Bowmanville, and part time at Cobourg. So we do not list him as a full-time psychiatrist at one institution.

Mr. Trotter: Oh, then he works full-time with the department, does he not?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Practically all. He is allowed to do other things. We want practically his full time. I would not say what—

Mr. Trotter: What would his salary be? How many days a month?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Twenty days a month.

Mr. Trotter: What is his salary?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It is $9,000 a year.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, they did have a full-time psychiatrist in the main office in Toronto. Now, apparently he departed a year ago, and I would ask the hon. Minister whether any steps have been taken to replace him?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would answer the hon. member this way. He was an outstanding man. He is speaking of Dr. Atcheson. We had him full time, and The Department of Health "pinched" him from us. That was the reason we lost him. We have lost him, although I must recognize that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) had a need that was greater than ours, and we went along with him on allowing this doctor to go with The Department of Health.

We have been trying, since that time, to get another man of his calibre on a full-time basis, and we have been unable, up to the present time, to do this.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I clarify this? The hon. Minister admits he has a real shortage with respect to psychiatrists, and I am sure, sir, that with his sympathetic approach, he is aware that many of these people who are going to jail do need psychiatric care.

Now, what does he think are the reasons that he cannot get the doctors? It is because of salary? This is a challenging field, particularly under the hon. Minister's administration. Why are we not getting more? In other countries, they seem to be able to attract people to go in to this field. Why cannot we do so in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: There might be something to what the hon. member says about salaries, but that is not the big thing. Such men really are not available. They are not being graduated from the universities.

We are in touch with universities all the time, to try to attract men to our field.

Then, I think that perhaps there might be, in the minds of some of the graduate psychiatrists and psychologists, a feeling that probably they could do better in some other field than in reform institutions.

It takes a specialized man who loves that type of work to be attracted to us. Other fields are often more lucrative, and probably not so hard or so arduous as the task in the reform institutions. I think that is about the best answer I can give the hon. member for Dovercourt. But we are constantly trying to recruit them.

Mr. Thompson: Does the hon. Minister think there might be a situation where a psychiatrist would feel that he cannot really make a contribution because of custodial curbs and the traditional approach which so long, unfortunately, had been with Ontario penal institutions? Also, would he feel, because he sees the men for just a short while, that his influence would not permeate the whole of the treatment that takes place in the institution?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I hope he would not feel like that. It could be.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to dwell on this point for just a minute. I think the hon. Minister will have to face the fact that he is not getting these top professional people because of the reputation of his department even though he is in the process of repairing that reputation.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Now, please, that is not true.

Mr. MacDonald: The attitude towards professionals in this department has been very much of a hostile one, and the circumstances under which they had to work was a very hostile one. At least it was one that they did not find agreeable.

I would submit to the hon. Minister that, when he says that, with their present part-time psychiatrists and psychologists, the job is being met, once again he is kidding himself and everybody that wants to have a job done in this field.

The proposition that the largest reform institution system in this country should be operating without any full-time psychiatric staff, I would suggest to the hon. Minister, is an absurd one.

We must get psychiatrists, and I think we have to create the circumstances under which they are willing to work, and feel that there is going to be encouragement for their work. That has not been the case.

However, there have been some steps taken that might make it a bit more attractive now, and we will just have to bide our time in the hope that the hon. Minister will be successful in getting them.

However, there is one particular institution, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to ask the hon. Minister about. A few months ago, I happened to have a few hours free one afternoon, and I dropped in for my first visit to Millbrook, and I must say that it is a very impressive building. Whether or not, at this stage in the game—in light of the hon.

Minister's glowing comments about open institutions—we should have built that kind of an institution in Ontario, is doubtful in my mind—along with the juvenile bastille that we built in Galt, concerning which I want to ask the hon. Minister some questions in a moment.

However, it is quite a fine building, but fine buildings are not going to do the job if we have not got the staff within them.

The thing I found most disturbing was that there was a physical set-up for a clinic to do a serious job. But, for reasons that I do not think are any reflection upon the people who are now operating that institution, the staff in this clinic has disintegrated. One, I believe, has gone on for further post-graduate work.

But here was a closed door, an inoperative clinic, in an institution—I believe I am right; the hon. Minister will correct me if I am wrong—which has 3 extremely important and challenging fields.

As I understand it, in Millbrook we have people who are convicted of alcoholism, and they are there until the time they may be sent on to the alcoholic clinic for the treatment, prior to their actual release.

Secondly, we have sex deviates, and thirdly we have the most disturbed criminals—the psychopaths, as they are described—from other institutions who have been separated out, and all brought to Millbrook, which is a high security institution.

In other words, here we have 3 categories in an institution in which we most urgently need a well-staffed clinic trying to find the answers for the rehabilitation of people who fall into these categories.

Now, this is part of the broader problem of keeping professional staff. But I want to ask the hon. Minister if, in the last couple of months or so, he has been able to rebuild the staff of the clinic in Millbrook.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Now, we have Dr. Webb there full time, with the exception of the trips he makes to Bowmanville and Cobourg, as I mentioned a while ago. And we have Dr. Penfold who is now on a bursary at Western University. We hope to have him back full time as soon as he is through, this year.

I mention, just in passing, that it takes 11 years, they tell me, to train a psychiatrist, so it will show hon. members how difficult it is to get them.

Millbrook, as my hon. friend says, is our total custodial unit, where our most disturbed prisoners go—our psychopaths, our sex deviates and drug addicts, but not so many for liquor offences.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. It is drugs, rather than alcohol.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: And, as a result, we must be more careful in that institution than in any other. It is our total custodial unit and we hope to have Dr. Penfold with Dr. Webb there next year.

If, in the meantime, we can recruit other psychiatrists and psychologists, we will be only too glad to do it. And I would like to make this a public announcement—if any of the good men are looking for a job in our department, we are open for them. We would be glad to talk to them and try to meet their wishes, because we feel that it is a very important part of our future programme. I am hoping to see it enlarged in every facet insofar as psychology and psychiatry are concerned.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): I am very much interested, Mr. Chairman, in this subject also.

When I was home last weekend I noticed, in the North Bay Nugget, a long letter from a young man who had been at a school in which I taught some years ago, and he brings up that point. He was hanged, as hon. members well may remember, last Friday morning, and he brings up the point for the necessity for psychiatrists.

This young man, of course, had a long record in crime.

Also, I noticed, in last Saturday's issue of the London Free Press a brief editorial. I do not know if the young man referred to is one of these fine young men of whom the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions spoke about yesterday populating the reformatories.

This editorial says, "No Reform."

It goes on to say that,

City Magistrate Menzies has sentenced a man 20 years of age to 6 years in the penitentiary for armed robbery. The haul was $18.

That is not the point. The important factor was that he was released from reformatory only 5 days before this crime.

Can the penitentiary where he is going now reform him, and turn him from a criminal to becoming an honest citizen? This case reflects the situation of other law-breakers, and warns us plainly that our penal system is neither reforming the law-breaker nor adequately protecting our community. I leave this to the consideration of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would like to say this to the hon. member. I quite agree that we cannot be successful 100 per cent. of the time.

I will tell him of one instance that happened the other day. A gentleman whom I knew, came out of one of our institutions and came to see me. He is a barber by trade. We got him a job in the city of Toronto, at the barber's trade, and bought him $60.80 worth of barber's tools. He worked that day and he was picked up by the police the next morning drunk, and sent to jail again for 30 days, and we had to pick up our barber's tools.

Now, he is not an example of the reform system falling down, he is an isolated case and the hon. members will find many of them. I imagine that boy he was speaking of is one.

But certainly it is not the general policy of this department to see men come out of our institutions and return right away. Our percentage of returns is comparatively small, with the exception of the alcoholics, and these are one of our big problems.

My hon. friend from York South was mentioning Friday about the incidence of crime, in comparison to that of the old country. I got some figures from Whitaker's Almanack over the weekend, and I notice that, in Great Britain, their daily jail population is 28,246 and that is for a population of 48 million or something like that, and ours with 6 million population in Ontario, is about 5,311. Now, our percentage per 100,000 is 89 per cent. against their 56 per cent., but 37.2 per cent. of that are crimes for drunkenness.

My own opinion is—and mind you I have no authority to speak for the courts at all—that there should be some change in committals of those under the influence of alcohol. We would see the tremendous change that would make in our penal figures if that were done. I understand that our hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is giving very serious thought to those same things, and hon. members will agree with me that it cannot be changed overnight. That is a thing that has to be given a lot of thought.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, while we are on this point—and I am not sure that I am in order here because I am not positive that it relates specifically to this item—but the hon.

Minister has brought this up, and I agree wholly with him, Mr. Chairman.

It seems to me that it is evident, even to laymen like ourselves, that a large portion of the reform institutions' population is made up of persons who have been charged with drunkenness and convicted. I think it is common knowledge that many of these people are repeaters. They get out for a few days, they are charged again and sent back.

Now, my specific question is this. Is it Mimico or is it Burtch that is devoted primarily to the treatment of alcoholism?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mimico.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, at Mimico how many, if I may term them "alcoholic beds" for want of a better term, do we have?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Thirty.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Thirty at Mimico. Do we have any alcoholic beds in any other institutions?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, that is the only one especially for alcoholic treatment.

Mr. Wintermeyer: So the contribution that the department is making toward the treatment of alcoholics, in terms of alcoholic beds, is a total of 30 in the province.

Now, in terms of numbers of inmates who are there because of drunkenness or repeated drunkenness, what is the actual population in all of our institutions, for drunkenness? What is the population of those convicted for drunkenness? I am not phrasing the question at all well here but I think the hon. Minister knows what I mean, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well I told the hon. leader of the Opposition that 37.2 per cent. are in for alcoholism, that is a little over a third.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, out of, what was it, 5,000?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It was 5,300.

Mr. Wintermeyer: So it would be close to 2,000 people who are in our institutions because of this particular—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would say that is reasonable:

Mr. Wintermeyer: And we have a total of 30 beds to take care of them.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, my specific question is this: Does the hon. Minister think that this is adequate at all?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, I do not, sir, but do not forget this again. It must be a voluntary request from those men to be treated.

Mind you, there are many other good clinics such as the Dr. Bell clinic here, and others, that look after those who are not incarcerated. But we find that those 30 beds, I think I am safe in saying this, are sufficient right at the moment to handle those who are absolutely anxious to be treated for alcoholism. There are not so many who come in, who are not looking for the day when they will be able to get out to have another shot.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly, Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. Minister has explained the situation. They are waiting for the day to get out to have another shot.

Mr. Chairman, I make this very seriously. I think the hon. Minister is trying—no question about that—but I suggest that, in this area we are not coming to grips with the problem. If approximately 1,500 to 2,000 people are in our reform institutions at any given time because of alcoholism, and we are treating 30 of those in a serious fashion, I suggest that the total population less 30, might just as well be out of our institutions. There is no particular purpose in keeping them there. And I think we are aggravating the situation.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I might just say, in connection with the study that is proceeding on this broad subject—not only in connection with people in provincial institutions, but also in the county jails and so forth—that no less an authority than Mr. David Archibald, who is the director of the alcoholic research foundation, is at this very time working on a second phase of planning in this.

I am hoping that, before this House prorogues later this spring, we will have the benefit of his recommendations in sufficient detail, in relation to a pilot plan that will, I hope, point the way for a very considerable reform in this field in the not-too-distant future.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask a question about another institution. But, before we leave these figures, I think one word of comment is required.

The hon. Minister has come up with a new set of figures out of Whitaker's Almanack, of all places, which I had not heard of before. It appears to be in contradiction with figures that have been repeated many, many times, not only in this House, but particularly by the director of probation in this province. The number of convictions and imprisonments may be of varying duration, but the number in the province of Ontario with one-eighth of the population is greater than it is in Great Britain.

I am speaking from memory now. But I think the figure of the number of people who are actually put in an institution was something like 33,000 for a year in Great Britain, because an even greater number were put out on probation, whereas here in the province of Ontario we had something approaching a 40,000 figure, of people who spent some length of time—it may be short, it may be long—in our institutions. That figure still stands. It was not contradicted by the new information that the hon. Minister gave us.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: My hon. friend may be right. The one great thing to remember is that there are a lot fewer institutions in the old country, per capita, than there are here. That is one reason, I am told, why there are not more in institutions, and that is told to me by men who are well versed in this field.

There is a big problem there in having institutions enough to handle that tremendous inmate population. They have not got the institutions there, that is why.

But they have a better approach, I think, to this drinking problem. They do not convict them as readily as we do. And that is one thing that I have noticed. They tell me that that is a big factor.

Now, there are 140,000 convictions in Great Britain a year, and something like 28,000 of a constant daily population, so it shows that they do not convict as many as we do. We are convicting 37.2 per cent. for drunkenness and they are not.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, let us face the fact that what happens in Britain is that for many short-term convictions or sentences, they do not put them into the institutions at all.

A woman who is caught stealing a 64-cent pound of butter in Loblaws, under any intelligent modern penal reform system, is not going to be sent to jail, particularly if it is a first offence, and yet this kind of thing is still going on in the province of Ontario.

I know there are complications in the case I have referred to, but this kind of thing does happen.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question with regard to that institution in Galt. I ask the question for this reason. The hon. Minister was in the House when, he may recall, one of his predecessors made the incredible statement that the only reason why that high security institution for juveniles in Galt was built, was because of the persistent pressure that was put on the department by some of the women's organizations in the field. I presume he meant the Elizabeth Fry people.

Now that the blame for building that kind of an institution should be put on the Elizabeth Fry society was, I thought, a preposterous suggestion.

If it was wrong to build it, surely the department had some views of their own and, if they thought it was wrong, they would not go ahead. I think they have to accept responsibility for it. And I think they did accept responsibility for it, despite the rationalization given by the hon. Minister on that occasion.

But my information is that the institution, having been built and having provoked quite a furor among the general public—particularly among interested organizations—is not now being used to its full capacity. In fact, on occasion during the past year, it has not even been in use at all.

I may be wrong on this, and I would appreciate some comments from the hon. Minister.

What exactly is the status of this juvenile bastille that was erected down there as a monument to the folly of past policies of this department?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, I would say to my hon. friend that the building has now been turned into a reception and diagnostic building. Girls admitted are taken there, examined, and we try to discover what their attitudes are and so on. But it is not used any more for close confinement or anything of that kind.

Now, while I am on that subject, I might say that my own thoughts on total custody and so on are very similar to the general opinion of people in this province. I think a hole in the floor is not a thing that is necessary at all. The whole description of the hole was that it was a safety factor, due to the fact that they would break up toilets and injure themselves and so on.

But now we have got the steel toilets, which are impossible for anybody to move, although some say they can be moved. I think it is a much better thing to have in a prison cell, especially where there are women, because of the indignities attached to some of the old facets that were considered safety factors. In my mind, they are obsolete and should not be there at all.

My own opinion of Churchill House being turned into a reception and diagnostic centre goes along with my thinking of more humanitarian methods because I have seen some of those girls down there, beautiful little girls.

I want, Mr. Chairman—at this time, and later too—to invite the hon. members down to see some of these institutions for themselves, because I think it is a department of government that they should be more familiar with, because it is so important.

But those little girls in there are lovely little girls. True, they have slipped. We have all slipped. But they have the basic elements in them of being in the future fine women of this country, if they get the proper humanitarian treatment. This reception and diagnostic centre is, I think, a move in the right direction to effect that result. I just like to pass that on to my hon. friend from York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I appreciate the hon. Minister's comment. There is just one thing that intrigues me here. Does the hon. Minister now state, Mr. Chairman that this building—so misconceived in the first instance and used as a high security institution—has been turned into a diagnostic centre and is now being named Churchill House?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: What an indignity!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, no. Just a moment, I am wrong on that. It is being called Galt reception and diagnostic centre.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say a word or two about this building that has now had its name changed to Churchill House.

I was delighted to hear my hon. friend from York South say that it is not now being used. And I am sorely tempted and indeed I am going to say, "I told you so."

Two years ago, I had occasion, when presenting the estimates of this department, to state that, according to the best advice that we could get, it seemed far more logical that we put 32 students under complete and maximum security and permit the other 170 to enjoy an open setting, and that the whole school should be placed under maximum security.

I stated at that time, Mr. Chairman, as I recall it that we were not proud of this bastille—as the hon. member chooses to call it—by any means, nor did we believe it was the last word in correction. But again I felt that it was justified—and I was more of the opinion then—that it was justified because we had, just at that time, had a visit from Miss Molly Mellonby, OBE, the only lady commissioner of prisons in the United Kingdom and the woman who, perhaps, knows more about penology than any other living woman in the British Commonwealth today, if not, indeed, the whole world.

She told us that that would exactly be her thinking, far better have 32 difficult children taken out of the open setting, and kept under maximum security conditions, than the remaining 170.

I see my hon. friend shaking his head. But, Mr. Chairman, I have never been too proud to accept advice, and I am far happier to accept the advice of a woman with the knowledge and experience of penology that Miss Mellonby has, than to take the ideas of laymen of which I myself was one at the time.

I also said, at that time, Mr. Chairman, that it would be the happiest day in my experience if I, or a successor, could come to this House and say we did not need this maximum security institution. It was there if we needed it, but we have never had occasion to need it.

I say this speaks volumes for the forward-looking, progressive attitude that this government has taken to reform in the past several years.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, just a minute.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that the hon. Minister of Health had to intervene and play the role of the Tory in such a partisan fashion, in trying to put the best front possible on this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No best front at all. I am simply telling the truth.

Mr. MacDonald: It is. It is. This was an ill-conceived institution from the very outset that they should build—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It was a wise move.

Mr. MacDonald: —in the year 1958 or 1959, an institution which is fundamentally the same as the institution they built for women down in Kingston back at the turn of the century. It is out of character that the hon. Minister, with whom I was willing to credit mainly the responsibility for starting a progressive policy, should rise and try to defend this kind of thing.

I say this to the hon. Minister, whatever he may say about the expert from Britain who came over—and there are more variations to the story he has told regarding the reports of visiting dignitaries—but the significant thing is that this government is not following her advice.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, yes, we are.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not following her advice. It is not a high security institution in which we throw juveniles as low as 10 or 11 years of age. They are now using it as a diagnostic centre, which is a different thing. In other words, the hon. Minister's own department, in keeping with the kind of brighter outlook, is moving—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I made it perfectly clear that we are pleased that it is not being used, that it is not necessary now because of the forward-looking attitude towards this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister wants to rise and try to defend the indefensible, let him go ahead. What in effect he is saying is that they built an institution for which they spent "x" number of dollars, a few hundreds of thousands of dollars, to deal with high security requirements and they use it for only two years.

Now, if this is not a piece of folly—that we should build a building for high security for juveniles and use it for only two years and then find we do not need it any more—it indicates the kind of unassorted jigsaw puzzle that this department was before—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It vindicates the programme.

Mr. MacDonald: It does not vindicate the programme, nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am sorry, I do not know everything.

Mr. MacDonald: On the basis of this, he is—

A Liberal hon. member: Between the two of them, they know quite a bit.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on two things.

But I would point out to the hon. Minister that the amount of money that is being expended on the treatment of alcoholics, or the amount of time which would be available to those inmates if they all chose to take treatment, would be one-half minute per day per person. So I think perhaps some thought might be given to improve this. I think that the department is not putting as much effort into this as they might.

But the question that I rose to ask in particular, Mr. Chairman, is with respect to item No. 1 of vote 2003, and that concerns salary.

I note from the public accounts book that last year $7 million, approximately, was appropriated, and that $6.557 million was expended, leaving approximately $500,000 which was not used. Then I note that, in the estimates for the current year, almost $8 million have been appropriated.

Now, I do not wish to yield the floor, Mr. Chairman, because if I do I may have a hard time getting back here again, but I would like to ask just what that covers. I would like to know whether or not it makes any provision for implementing the principle of equal rights and equal pay for equal work.

I had occasion recently to note that it seems to be the policy, in the jails throughout the province, to have matrons paid on a different scale. That means the women are paid on a much lesser scale than that of the male guards. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that they are doing the same type of work.

I find it difficult to understand how the principle of equal work and equal pay would apply to the policeman and the policewoman who apprehend a person who is later interned in our jail. They are pretty well all included in the principle of equal pay for equal work. But when we get inside the jail, then I find that there is a very serious discrepancy between the pay scale of the male and the female help.

I would like to know if it is the policy of The Department of Reform Institutions to institute a system of equal pay for equal work, and if any provision has been made in the current estimates to provide for this principle.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member mentioned the differentiation between the total in the estimates for salaries and what we spent. That is explained by the fact that Millbrook was not in full operation at that time, neither was Fort Bolster nor Ingleside. These are two new places that have come into full complement since that estimate.

All men and women on our payroll are paid exactly the same. There is no differentiation. The hon. member's figures might apply to city jails that are not under our jurisdiction. But in any of our reform institutions, where we have full authority, men and women are paid the same. It does not matter whether they are supervisory or custodial guards or whatever they are.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, it may be that I am misinformed. But I understood that it was necessary for the municipalities to get approval from this government with respect to the salaries paid to male and female employees. Now, I further understand that it is most unlikely that any municipality which submitted a budget, which allowed the same pay to matrons as that which was paid to male guards, would be able to have that budget approved.

I should like the hon. Minister's assurance that there would be no effort made here to change that policy, should any municipality wish to implement the policy of equal pay for equal work with respect to male and female help. I should like his assurance on that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We have nothing to do with paying these salaries. But, if there is a dispute in a municipality where a reeve and council or mayor and council are sitting, and they think that it is too high for the taxpayers to pay, then they can come to us and we can set what we think is a fair salary. We do not go out looking for it, they come to us. That has been done in a lot of cases.

We would certainly designate the same principle there as we do in our own institutions, the same pay for men and women, regardless of what position they were in, that would be our stand.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister about this store which is apparently being operated at the industrial farm at Burwash for the personnel. I would like to know something about how it is operated, and if it is operated by the industrial farm or whether it is operated by some retail operator?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It is operated by the department, by our own people. The goods there are purchased by our own employees who live in our own houses on the property, and the goods are sold at cost, plus 5 per cent.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Chairman, I would like to caution the hon. Minister along those lines.

That would be a very dangerous way in which to operate, if there are any number of personnel there involved. It is costly not only to the government, but it does set a precedent and where this is done it should not be done except in a very minor way.

If it happens that the hon. Minister is involved with a great many employees, I would imagine he could get into rather a box in this particular situation. In other words he is subsidizing this particular industrial farm. If the salaries and wages are paid proportionately with other types of his institutions, in this particular case there is a definite advantage given. Now, as a matter of principle, I think he should look into this and do something constructive about it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I would just like to tell the hon. member that the nearest point to our institution there is 20 miles away at Sudbury. We have 180 families living on the property, and they are the only ones who deal at this store, or are allowed to deal at the store. Has he a solution to it? What would be his solution?

Mr. Chapple: My solution would be to have a retail outlet placed at that particular spot, where the merchandise is handled outside away from department personnel entirely. This would be the fairest way of handling it, and would be definitely to the advantage of, not only the institution but it would make it fair in conjunction with departmental operations concerning other institutions.

In other words, the hon. Minister is not doing the proper thing and, in fact, he is taking on the activities, one might say, of a retail operation which he should not do, unless it is absolutely necessary. Where 180 families are involved, I think he is not doing the right thing.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am still interested in connection with this government's philosophy regarding the optimum size of institutions. We heard from the hon. Minister of Health that, from this expert, there was the suggestion that 32 would be an optimum number of children to be treated in a centre.

I was concerned because on Friday, when we were discussing this, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) suggested that the policy was for bigger and better institutions. According to the penologists whom I have read, their philosophy is to have smaller segregated units. I would ask if that is the hon. Minister's point of view, or if his is similar to that of the hon. Prime Minister?

And may I also ask this question, in connection with inmates learning trades? I have noted, for example, in Mexico where they cannot afford to keep the people in the jails—and I agree that we also cannot afford to be keeping so many in jail—they are now having a system of weekend jails.

In this case, the units are built near industrial areas, the people go out during the day, to work at a trade, and come back again at night, or else they come back for the weekend. And their point of view is this, that when we incarcerate a man we take away his rights. But we should not also take away his obligations, deprive him of fulfilling his obligations to his family and leaving it to the country to support them.

I think our philosophy is to take away not only his rights, but also his obligations. I think if we thought more of helping this man to work in the community, to have small institutions near industrial areas where he can go out by day and come back, say, at night or on the weekends, that this would be a forward step in connection with penal reform.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I think there is some merit in what the hon. member says. I am on record in the press as saying, at the time of the Guelph riot, that one of the reasons for the disturbance was that the population was too great. I go along with the idea that there should be a maximum of only 350 men in any prison. I am on record as to that.

And let me say this to the hon. members—the hon. Prime Minister and this government have never put one stumbling block in my way of bringing in any humanitarian advance that I thought practical. They are behind me in this 100 per cent., so do not say that they—

Mr. MacDonald: They have been battered into submission by public opinion.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. Prime Minister has always been that way. True, I like to see hon. members bring in criticism and so on, it does us good to have these debates and criticism. But do not forget that the hon. Prime Minister and this government are 100 per cent. behind this, and when hon. members speak of the hon. Minister of Health, he is one who did a tremendous job in bringing in these reforms.

Now, it is all right for us all to say what should be done. The hon. member mentioned we are getting to the point of paying inmates so they will have the benefit of feeling they are doing something towards keeping their families when they are in there. I agree with his philosophy. I think this government agrees. But we cannot do these things all at once.

Mr. Thompson: Just on a point of information. I am suggesting that inmates—certainly selected inmates—should be allowed to go out into the community and come back to a supervised surrounding. I did not refer to paying them for the work in the institution.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right, that is right. But I am getting to this point. In the institutions, in years to come, I think we are going to get into some kind of policy where inmates are paid a small amount for the work they do, and that in turn will be given to their families.

At the present time, a man is bitter and his wife is often bitter, because the breadwinner has got himself into trouble, and cannot support her, and she has to go on relief with her family. He is worrying about that in the institution. In turn, he feels bitter that he is not looking after her and his children.

If we can remove that, it might be a step in the right direction. But there are a lot of things to be thought of before we put these things in operation. There are a lot of single men in there. Are we going to pay the married men and not the single men? All those problems arise.

But I assure the hon. member that they are constantly being given a lot of thought, with an idea, in the future, of making better all these things.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to pursue this just a little further.

In connection with our institutions, it seems to be that they are overcrowded—the hon. Minister admits this himself—that every one of our institutions is overcrowded. Is he still considering building large institutions? What are the sizes of the various proposed institutions?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: In all our new institutions—I would say 125 in Lindsay and in Simcoe 125. I would say that any we are proposing that the one at the Lakehead for women, will have a capacity of 40 to 50. Then the training school up there, if there is one in that district, would probably be for 100 to 125.

But I certainly would never approve of another institution like Guelph, where we can put 1,000. How can one possibly look after 1,000 men in one institution? It has been proven a mistake. In great big institutions of 2,500 and 5,000, as in the United States, every once in a while there is a terrific riot.

We cannot get guards to look after that many men. Guards must become acquainted daily with those men, to know what is going on. They should be in touch with them, know who the troublemakers are, and take them and send them some place else. We cannot do that with 1,000 or 2,000 people.

In my opinion it is wrong, and this government goes along with me in agreeing that it is.

Mr. Thompson: Is the hon. Minister going to locate these institutions near industry, or is he going to have them removed? For example, the hon. member for Fort William was suggesting some type of a retail store, and yet the hon. Minister explained it was about 20 miles from the nearest community. It seems to me it is our job to keep people not too removed from the community. Is that the intention of the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Of course, Burwash was built years ago.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. Minister if, in view of the difficulty in getting psychologists and psychiatrists to work full time with the department, he might not make some arrangements with psychiatrists who are in private practice to donate so much of their time? This idea works with the workmen's compensation, the private practice will take care of it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We are glad to do so in every instance we can. I mentioned about the man whom the hon. Minister of Health took from us—an outstanding man—they had a terrific problem with little children, and we felt that was really a work that needed humanitarianism and immediate attention, so we went along with the hon. Minister to let him have that man.

Now, we have not been able to replace him, even with a part-time man. We have a terrific time getting them, and it is not a matter of salary altogether. These men are so scarce, and they are very greatly in demand. That is our big problem, and we hope that it will be rectified, because the universities are going into that field very much more strongly, and more men are coming out.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, a couple of years ago I had occasion to approach the hon. Minister of The Department of Reform Institutions with regard to a grievance of a constituent of mine.

This constituent apparently had injured his hand while working in the butcher shop or the slaughterhouse, or whatever you call it, at Guelph. On being discharged, he found he was unable to go back and do his own regular work.

I found that the department had no policy on compensation or help in this case, but they looked at each case on its merits.

I wonder what, if any, set policies there are now in regard to inmates being injured, on coming out or being discharged before the injury is healed enough for them to go back to their own work. And I would ask why they are not covered under a basic policy. I wonder what the percentage is of inmates confined to infirmaries through injury in the different trades they are working at in Guelph.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would say this to the hon. member, just recently we had a man in Fort William—a very decent fellow, too—making these picnic tables, and he backed into a saw and cut his left arm very badly. We had him under a doctor's care. They were afraid at first that he was going to lose the use of his whole hand.

This man is an alcoholic. His sentence expired, and we pleaded with that man to stay with us. We have kept him since last July, under doctor's care, because we were afraid if he got out and became drunk and fell, he would probably do himself permanent injury. He is out now and doing quite well, and I think he is going to make a pretty nearly full recovery.

Now, we have no coverage such as workmen's compensation or anything, and I think hon. members can understand the reason why. Suppose we had—some of these men, who have indicated intractability and other shortcomings, might purposely injure themselves to have a meal ticket in the future.

Now, that is one of the theories. I have given a lot of thought to that, and we certainly do not take a man who hurts himself and throw him out on the street. Hon. members may have noticed the other day a case where a lady sued a prison for $25,000—I think it was in the old country—and collected it. Now, that could happen in any of our institutions, but the incidence of injury is not very great. We have been very fortunate.

But certainly we do look after them, because we do not want anybody going out of those institutions and going to one of these very clever lawyers, and saying that such-and-such a thing happened, and have that lawyer balloon it into a great major case and probably slam a suit at us for hundreds of thousands of dollars. This could happen.

So we are very careful indeed, and we have not been able to find any solution to workmen's compensation in those institutions yet. Whether it will come later or not, is another thing. But it is being studied.

Mr. Gisborn: What percentage are confined to the infirmary through injuries at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It is very difficult to give the hon. member that at the moment, but I certainly, pardon—

Mr. Gisborn: How many people, how many persons are confined in the infirmary now?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: There are none at the moment that I know of. But I could get that figure for the hon. member. This one I mentioned is the only one I know of who has suffered a more or less permanent injury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I note, with reference to the vote, that the amount asked for the institution in Guelph is far and away larger than that of any of the other institutions.

Now, I have had the impression, I would say to the hon. Minister, for a number of years—though no one in authority has ever told me that it is accurate—that first offenders are sent to Guelph.

If that impression is correct, I would like to ask the hon. Minister just what procedures are adopted at Guelph, or what methods of reform are used there, with first offenders that do not pertain to the other institutions.

What I am getting at, is this. If they have a selected population in that institution of first offenders, then good sense demands that they try to do something with that group so that they do not come back.

And I would like to inquire, from the hon. Minister, just what methods are used at Guelph to assist these people to rehabilitate themselves in society, with a view to seeing to it that they do not become repeaters.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: There are a tremendous number of industries there, including a large farm, large abattoir, large machine shops, carpenter shop, tailor shop, planing mill, all those things. That is where that money comes in. It is for materials and so on for the rehabilitation of inmates. It is a tremendous industry.

I would like to take the hon. member up there sometime and show him around. But the industry amounts to over $2 million, that is the stuff we turn out every year.

Mr. Sopha: Well, that was not my question. That was just the preface to it. I am asking the hon. Minister what procedures he uses at Guelph toward first offenders.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: All offenders 16-21 years go there, and the first offenders over 21 years. Now that is a big field. There are, I think, 971 there right now. That is the answer to his question.

Mr. Sopha: Well, what does the hon. Minister do about them? I have been led to believe, in talking to people that have been in there, that Guelph is nothing more than the university of crime.

They say they go there, they learn from some of the "old pros" how to better effect nefarious purposes, and it is not long till they are either back in that institution, or they are in one operated by the federal government. I say that to the hon. Minister with no fear of any exaggeration at all.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I was there Saturday myself, talking to many of them. It is a tremendously busy place—we teach them trades. I cannot see anything so terribly criminal about them. I do not think that institution is a cesspool of crime. The hon. member must have listened to somebody who was disgruntled at being sent back a second time.

Mr. Sopha: Now, notwithstanding the intervention of the hon. Minister of Health, when he got up in his partisan fashion and talked about the forward-looking approach of this government, with respect to this department, I want to say this.

We speak over here with the knowledge that the recidivist rate in Canada is among the highest in the western world, and it has been a national calamity and a national shame for a good many years. That is so.

Therefore, the responsibility falls upon the hon. Minister's department to do something to lower the recidivist rate, because I say to him that there is a far too-high percentage, down in Kingston penitentiary, of people who have been sentenced to imprisonment for more than 2 years. I might add that I have a good many clients in that one, a good many clients in his institutions, too, and I have talked to these people.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): The hon. member has not a very good record if they are in the institutions.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I do not win every case, but it is true that the recidivist rate is among the highest in the western world. We will not do anything about reducing that, or rehabilitating these people to make them good and useful citizens, unless we have some positive steps. It is important that those steps be taken in an institution like Guelph, where departmental people meet these offenders for the first time, after their first act of disaffection from society.

And I would urge upon the hon. Minister that he do something about that institution, and introduce some progress and some rehabilitation in it, so that when people go out of there, they have a good chance of not coming back. The hon. Minister will not do it by listening to the fancy phrases of the hon. Minister of Health about the forward-looking approach of this government. He needs something concrete.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would like to say to the hon. member that I do not know where he gets his figures about recidivity, but they do not jibe with mine.

Mr. Sopha: Look in the Canada Year Book.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is recidivists.

The hon. member says that the percentage is tremendously high, that does not jibe with my figures. I do not know where he gets his. Nevertheless I would say to my hon. friend, and admit freely, that we are far from perfect. The only way we can be assisted towards perfection, would be for hon. gentlemen like himself to give us their thinking and their help in these things. We solicit it. And I would be very glad if some day the hon. member would come up and go through that institution with me. He might change his thinking.

Mr. Sopha: I will take him up on that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: All right.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): The racing commission threw him out on his ear when—

Some hon. members: Yes, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to a topic that the hon. member for Wentworth was touching upon a few moments ago. Some two months ago, on January 9, the Toronto Daily Star carried what I thought was an exceedingly good article by Monroe Johnston, entitled, "Jail Staff Impoverished Prisoners". The opening paragraph says:

There are more than 500 prisoners in Ontario jails who have never committed a crime. The conditions surrounding their confinement are shameful, yet most of them are decent, lawful abiding men and women. The unfortunate are the governors, turnkeys and matrons in the 37 county jails in Ontario.

Now, when the hon. member for Wentworth raised this, I understood the hon. Minister to say that, if those responsible for a county or district jail come to him and ask for suggestions, he gives suggestions as to what should be paid. But, he said, he does not go out looking for violations of The Fair Remuneration Act of 1951, which says there should be equal pay for women.

Without going into the details of it, this article spells out what is being paid up in Victoria county, what is being paid in Grey county. It says the distressing story is repeated in county after county, pleading inability to pay. Knowing full well how difficult it is for matrons in jails to enlist public sympathy, county councillors have followed the same penurious pattern. The climax of the story is in the instance of where the matron in the Grey county jails is apparently being paid the princely sum of $13 a week.

Now, I was wondering, in view of the somewhat vague explanation the hon. Minister gave a few moments ago regarding the supervision or the co-operation of this department with those who are responsible for these jails, whether or not the time has not come when some sort of model salary scale should be set down.

If necessary, when the counties have not the money, the province should assume some responsibility for paying an adequate amount for people who are responsible for these institutions. I say this because clearly, in light of what is spelled out here, they are in violation of the equal pay for equal work legislation that we have on the books.

I was wondering why the hon. Minister's department does not move and do something to see that they live up to the law of the province.

But, apart from that, what about the proposition of laying down model salaries, so that the 500 staff members for these district jails will not be in a position which is even worse than that of the inmates who have been convicted and sentenced there? Is the hon. Minister going to do anything?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I was going to say that they can see the lists of salaries we send out to them. We send them out regularly. But did the hon. member for York South ever think that a Minister, stepping out and telling a municipal council what to do, might get a slap on the ear? They like to use their own prerogative.

Now, that is about how it is. If there is going to be some dissatisfaction, and so on, about local salaries, it should come from the local level to us.

Then the hon. member goes on to say that the province should pay it, and so on. Now, that is another proposition. When they come to us to figure that one out, hon. members will probably be brought into the debate at that time. But that is the answer I give.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this comes under the hon. Minister's jurisdiction, his supervision—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, it does not.

Mr. MacDonald:—and I submit it becomes the responsibility of The Department of Reform Institutions to take whatever action is necessary, to cease the exploitation of the people who are working in these district jails.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We have taken action time and again.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Minister fix the salaries in the Don jail here?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Well, why is the Don jail different than any place else? The hiring is done by the hon. Minister's department, the salaries are fixed, and the bill is sent to Metro. Now, why cannot that be done in other places?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, my answer to the hon. member is this, Metro asked us to do it, and we did it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I was there for two years, and the most violent arguments that emanated from the Metro executive and Mr. Gardiner—and they were repeated the other day—were that we have so much to do, and we are being frustrated by these provincial departments which do the hiring, and fix the salaries, and do not give us anything to say about it. They said that just the other day.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Could I ask the hon. Minister if he fixes the salaries for the staff in the Hamilton jails?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The Hamilton jail authorities, I say to my hon. friend, have never asked us. If they did, we would be glad to.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, could I have an answer to my question as to whether the department fixes the salaries of the Hamilton jail staff?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: So many of them are coming that I cannot follow them.

Mr. Singer: Did Metro ask the hon. Minister to fix the salaries in this year, 1960?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No.

Mr. Singer: Well then, why is he doing it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, we have not done it in 1960. We did it in 1959.

Mr. Singer: And the hon. Minister is doing it in 1960. They are in the process of preparing their budget. They are holding meetings about it. The same complaints came forward from the executive committee.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The request has not come to us.

Mr. Singer: Well, the hon. Minister has fixed them for this year, has he not?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No request has come to us.

Mr. Singer: But they are fixed, are they not, by the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I do not know. We have—

Mr. Singer: Well, if he does not know, who does?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, they are not fixed by us, I am trying to tell my hon.

friend if he would listen. We fixed them last year, or made the suggestions for them. This year we have no request for suggestions. Why should we go and fix them? We do not do things like the hon. member would, we wait until we are asked, and we do not butt in.

Mr. MacDonald: There is an injustice here, Mr. Chairman. If there is an injustice, the hon. Ministers across should get out of their chairs and do something about it—and clearly there is an injustice.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Where?

Mr. MacDonald: There is an injustice in terms of the salaries that are being paid.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Quite right, quite right. And that is being looked into, I would like to tell the hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I want to get this answer and I want to get it clear from the hon. Minister.

The Metro executive committee is now fixing its budget for the year 1960. A newspaper account of deliberations, published within the last two or three days, indicated that they made the same complaints that have been made at least for the last 4 years, that salaries for such people as the employees at the Don jail are being fixed by the provincial government and they have no control over them. Is this true or is it not true?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is not factual in this way. If they set their salaries and then there is a tremendous complaint or discussion in council and so on, they can say, "We have nothing to do with it or will not have anything to do with it." Then we will set the salaries. We do, and that goes back to them, and they must agree to pay them, I would point out that they can refuse too. Last year they refused and we put them in the courts.

But we go first to them and say, "This is what we figure is fair and we would like you to pay it." Well then, if they refuse, we say, "Well, we are going to do it."

But we do not want to butt into municipalities and say what they are going to do. That is their prerogative. They elect mayors and men to do it.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am more than a little confused at this point. Last year the hon. Minister said that he fixed them, Metro objected, and then what did he do?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Metro paid them.

Mr. Singer: Then is he not fixing? Is it not under the hon. Minister's direction?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: But we were told that they did not want to have anything to do with it. They had arrived at their decision. Now they said we should make the suggestion, we did and they paid it. Now, we have not had that request this year. We have had no request from them.

Mr. Singer: At what salary scale are those employees going to be paid this year? Are they salary scales that have emanated from the hon. Minister's office?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Last year.

Mr. Singer: So that the hon. Minister is fixing them.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Just a minute. Let me put it this way. We made a suggestion and they agreed to it and paid it.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Hold on, hold on. Getting back to this county jail business again, getting back to the salaries, I understand—at least when I have been visiting the county jails in Guelph—they have the inspector coming around making suggestions about changes that are to be made.

Now, does the government pay any of this cost in regards to putting on new doors, new locks and screens? Or does it pay any of the overall cost of county jails, other than through the per capita grants towards the cost of courts?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, there are the unconditional grants which are paid by the province, and they are very, very considerable. But, in many instances, I regret to say that, in many municipalities, the portion of the unconditional grants that should go in the jail goes some place else. But we have no jurisdiction over that, and probably I should not say it, but that happens.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I want to turn for a moment to another matter which also comes under this very large vote.

I have been waiting for more than 6 weeks for an answer to question No. 9 on the order paper. It may be—although I do not see quite how—but it may be that some of the details that I have asked for take rather a long time to provide.

Perhaps the hon. Minister, even though he may not be in a position to give me all the details, could give me at least some general information with regard to the department's policy on the purchase of drugs.

Now, under item No. 2 of vote 2003, there is a very comprehensive item covering a great many different things. But included in it are medicine and medical comforts, including tobacco, which is part of a vote of $3.5 million.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he could give me at least approximate figures as to the amount under this vote, or under any other vote in the department, which the department envisages spending on drugs. Secondly, I would like to ask him what is the policy of the department as to the purchase of drugs—that is, between purchasing drugs under brand names on the one hand and generic names on the other hand.

I would appreciate it if he could give me at least a general answer to those two questions.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, first of all, I would like to ask the hon. member what he means by a drug. What is he referring to especially?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I think, Mr. Chairman, that surely that term is a fairly well understood term, and I think it comes under the general heading of medicines. It consists of pharmaceutical preparations of one kind and another which are used for the treatment of various types of illnesses.

I ask for an approximate answer, so I do not think it is necessary for me to give a precise legal definition of the term "drug". I think the hon. Minister understands the term very well.

I may say, I have looked the term up in pretty authoritative works, and they end up by saying a drug is a drug, that is about what it adds up to.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We have prepared the answers for the hon. member's question. It has been sent in, and I suppose he will be hearing about it in the fullness of time, which will give him the greatest satisfaction.

Mr. Bryden: How about a little preview on the answer?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I have not the colossal memory that my hon. friend might have. I cannot remember them all.

Mr. Bryden: Well, surely, the hon. Minister could at least give me an answer.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member will get the answer in the fullness of time.

Mr. Bryden: Well, surely the hon. Minister could answer this much. He could answer a question with regard to the policy of the department, as to whether its policy is to purchase under generic names or under brand names, or if it is a combination of both.

I would like some outline of what the policy is, because, according to the information I have, it makes a great deal of difference in the cost of the same preparation, as to the method of purchasing it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That will be all in the answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, in connection with the store for the personnel at the industrial farm at Burwash, I am quite interested when the hon. Minister says that business was done 5 per cent. above cost.

What personnel do they have to run that store at 5 per cent. above cost? I wish we could run business that way, it would be very profitable.

Are wages paid to those who work in that store, or do they work for nothing?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The cost of the goods, salaries, and so on, are in there, and the 5 per cent. added is for overhead and other expenses. Salaries and so on are included in the cost of the goods.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. Minister refers to the overhead. What is the overhead? Is it cash and carry? Do they have refrigeration there? There are a lot of things that come into overhead there, you know.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It is to cover the general administration of overhead, the 5 per cent.

Mr. Gordon: What I want to know is what the hon. Minister means by overhead. What does overhead cover? Our overhead covers salaries and rent and light.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The same thing.

Mr. Gordon: Does the hon. Minister pay taxes? Does he have any rent?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No. We do not have any taxes.

Mr. Gordon: What wages does he pay? Who is his manager? Does he have a manager to run it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: A storekeeper and a cashier.

Mr. Gordon: A storekeeper and a cashier. Five per cent. will not cover that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, we find that it does, because we do not have to have the high class clerks and so on.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister a question on the Guelph reformatory and the training school? Are they separated in these accounts, or are they all put in under the reformatory?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The expenses are combined for the Ontario training school at Guelph and the reformatory. In the Ontario training school at Guelph, we have some 45 there as of Saturday. It is an adjunct, really, of the Guelph reformatory, and the expenses are lumped together for the sake of economy and bookkeeping staff and all that sort of thing.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I believe they produce the clay brick at Mimico. What was the total production of clay brick at Mimico this year, and is the total production used by the government, or is it sold outside to private interests?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: They are all used by The Department of Public Works for our own institutions. In many, many cases, where there are local firms making brick and so on, we do not interfere with them at all. Public Works deal direct with them. For instance, up at the head of the lakes a private plant, Rosslyn's, gets most of the business up in that area. We do not ship our brick and tile there. The number made by us last year was 1,397,300 pieces of common and tapestry brick, assorted sizes, and structural tile, amounting to a total of $78,806.

Vote 2003 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), when presenting his estimates, remarked to this House that he was presenting the estimates of his department for the seventeenth consecutive time.

Although this is the third portfolio I have held in this government—I am presenting for the second time only, the estimates of The Department of Health.

During the Throne speech debate I reported at some length on matters relating to one division, the most extensive division of my department, namely, the mental health division. No doubt other matters relating to it will come up during the estimates, so I will not deal further with it now.

I have noted with a good deal of interest that several hon. members on both sides of the House have dealt with health matters in their speeches. This, I think, Mr. Chairman, shows the broad concern felt by so many and, of course, this is only as it should be, since health is a matter of great concern to all of us. Probably no department of government so closely touches all of our people as does The Department of Health.

Apart from the mental health branch, the work of the department may well be all included under the heading of the public health branch—although this embraces some 12 distinct and separate sub-branches. Other agencies coming within the purview of the department include:

The heart foundation, the cancer treatment and research foundation, the Ontario cancer institute, the commission for cancer remedies, as well as several professional, quasi-professional, and technical bodies.

Some matters of general interest may be worthy of note here. The total staff of the department numbers 10,167 full-time and 238 part-time employees. The part-time staff comprises mainly nurses, nurse-aides, and medical, surgical and other consultants.

The total budget asked for the fiscal year 1960-1961 is $92,195,000—a far cry from the first budget, when the department had its inception in 1882—the budget that year was $4,000.

Now, for a very superficial review, in general, of the various divisions, since I expect details will arise as the items in each vote are dealt with. It is quite impossible, in the time at my disposal, to deal meticulously with every bit of activity in The Department of Health.

PUBLIC HEALTH

Health Units

These units, now 33 in number in the province, provide a complete public health service for more than two million of the population. Add to this the full-time and complete services in most cities and larger towns of the province and more than 80 per cent. of the total population of Ontario is included.

Health units began as a union of municipalities—some urban and rural, some completely rural—for the purpose of providing a community public health service under the direction of full-time qualified personnel. That the movement has been successful is evident from its growth, and from the fact that not one unit once established has yet disintegrated. These units are set up by local authority with consultative services and financial help from the government to The Department of Health.

These units provide a public health programme for prenatal care, for infants, pre-school children, school health nursing services, sanitation, food control, and control of communicable diseases. They link the practicing physician and the voluntary health agencies to the overall programme. They provide physicians with information on public health measures, new techniques and developments—and strive ever to stimulate interest in the importance of preventive medicine.

Epidemiology

This is a division of which little usually is heard—but a most important one in the health of the province. It is sometimes thought this division would have little to do in our modern society when it appears that most infectious diseases have been brought under control. Yet, only recently, this division was called upon to deal with one of the most puzzling problems faced by our department in recent years.

I refer to the peculiar symptoms appearing in several patients, after surgery, at one of the hospitals at the Lakehead. It should be a matter of pride to the people of the province that even before we, in the department, had received an official call for help in this case, one of our epidemiologists was on his way to the hospital in question, to begin investigation and to render whatever help was possible from the facilities at the disposal of the department.

During 1959, an upward trend was noted in cases of paralytic poliomyelitis—198 cases out of 228—the highest rate since 1953. This causes us a good deal of concern since a downward trend had been noted in Ontario since 1956.

Analysis of the figure shows that the largest number of cases reported were in eastern Ontario near Quebec, where a severe epidemic occurred: 46 per cent. were aged 0-4 years; 18 per cent., 5-9 years; 72 of the 127 cases had no Salk vaccine; most of the remainder had not completed the prescribed course of 3 doses.

This, I believe, is further evidence that Salk vaccine has been of definite value in the decreasing incidence of polio.

Rabies decreased 60 per cent. in 1959, as opposed to 1958. It was most prevalent in the western end of the province. Centrally, Hastings and Northumberland were hardest hit. The Temiskaming district in the north was moderately hit.

Despite the reduced incidence, Ontario had one death—a young boy—from rabies and one adult death suspected but not proven. Vaccine was administered to 495 persons exposed to wild or domestic animals proven or suspected of being rabid.

The department continues to provide vaccine free of charge to doctors. Many biological substances are distributed free of charge by this division, to doctors and public health units and hospitals throughout the province.

Tuberculosis Prevention

For the first time in history in the province of Ontario, we experienced a decrease in the number of first admissions to hospital for tuberculosis. This decrease was significant—and, I believe, can justly be attributed to the extensive and intensive programme of prevention which has been encouraged by the tuberculosis prevention and control division. There has been a very marked intensification of the programme of testing and case-finding.

As one of the staff put it: "We continue more and more vigorously to seek out tuberculosis, we do not wait for it to seek us out." This I know will come as something of a surprise to some of the hon. members on the opposite side.

Mass surveys are not heard about so much as they were even 5 years ago. But they are still being carried on, more than ever before.

All patients admitted to general hospitals, with few exceptions, are expected to have a chest X-ray. This is not 100 per cent. perfect yet, but is moving in this direction. I will have more to say about this later.

The division of industrial hygiene encourages TB testing of all industrial employees, and now this has become a pre-employment requisite in many instances. All school teachers, hospital employees, food handlers, jail and other institutional staffs, have periodic tests. More recently, at the request of children's aid societies, all foster parents are also being checked for tuberculosis before foster children are admitted to that home.

The department operates 3 mobile and 3 portable X-ray units for use in community and industrial surveys throughout the province. Only recently we acquired a new unit—the most modern in safety and efficiency.

By it the exposure hazard has been brought to the lowest possible state.

The Gage institute, operated by the National Sanitarium Association, has 3 mobile units and is responsible for York and Simcoe counties, Parry Sound and Muskoka districts.

The Freeport, Essex and Niagara sanatoria each operate a mobile X-ray unit to cover the areas for which they are responsible.

In 1958, the last year for which figures are complete, almost 850,000 persons were X-rayed. Of these, 703 were found to have active or inactive tuberculosis. We are still concerned about the high incidence of tuberculosis found in those committed to jail; 101 out of 22,646 tested in 1958 were sent to sanatoria—almost 5 in 1,000, as compared with 8 in 1,000 for general population.

Every effort is being made to check, even more perfectly, all commitments to every jail in the province. X-ray equipment has been installed in the 20 largest jails—for this the department pays in whole or in part. We also pay the sanatoria in each district for the films and the interpretation of them.

In addition, sanatoria personnel visit 14 smaller jails with travelling clinics—this phase of the programme is being reviewed with the objective of making it more efficient.

Greater attention than ever before is being given to our aged population. It has long been known that here might be latent sources of infection, and now we are seeking them out in every possible way. Communities are being encouraged to have chest X-rays—all admissions to homes for the aged are being tested. In these ways, we hope to still further reduce the incidence of this disease.

Having in mind the fact that diagnostic—that is medical and dental X-rays—still present the greatest radiation hazard to our people, every effort is still being made to reduce this to the lowest possible degree. New and safer equipment continue to be developed. Many voluntary associations and hospitals provide people with cards on which is noted every exposure to X-rays.

I stated that the programme to X-ray every admission to general hospitals was not perfect, but this is because of imperfect or inadequate knowledge and information concerning previous exposure. Therefore, in cases where it is felt harm may result—as in the case of expectant mothers—the X-ray usually is done after the baby has been delivered.

Realizing that chest X-rays may be actually necessary in only relatively few of the general population, we are now seeking proof of this by a mass tuberculin testing survey. Victoria county and the town of Lindsay were chosen as the pilot area at their request. Only those showing positive reaction to the tuberculin test will be X-rayed. Those with a negative reaction will be recalled annually for a repeat tuberculin test. Thus, tuberculin testing will supplement X-rays—not replace it—but we do hope it will obviate the necessity of a good deal of exposure.

No doubt hon. members continue to be interested in the bed state of the sanatoria. As of today there are 2,860 tuberculosis beds in the sanatoria of the province; 2,075 of these are occupied by patients with tuberculosis. Only a relatively short time ago, there were 4,370 beds—the difference have been converted to other uses, for example, Hamilton and Windsor have converted part of their surplus accommodation to general hospital use; Freeport, Brantford, Hamilton, Cornwall, and Fort William have opened wings for chronic and convalescent patients.

Part of the Kingston sanatorium is being used to house nursing assistants in training. St. Catharines has opened a specialized chest unit for non-TB cases.

The division of mental health has acquired Beck sanatorium in London, and our occupation there will expand as theirs contracts. We are now negotiating for the Cravenhurst property, and also for the surplus accommodation at Ottawa.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, every bit of surplus accommodation in these sanatoria will be put to the best possible use. But it should be borne in mind that a certain number of extra beds will always appear in statistics during this transitional stage. We cannot, for very obvious reasons, convert every bed as soon as it becomes vacant.

Rehabilitation

Rehabilitation has probably been more actively carried out in TB sanatoria than in any other hospital, except perhaps the workmen's compensation unit. For last year, for example, we present some interesting statistics:

Placed in training	152
Placed in employment after training	124
Placed in employment without training	218
Placed in employment after counselling	124
Total	618
Present case load in this realm	456

Now, this type of rehabilitation more nearly approaches my ideal than any I have yet seen. Here the patient is not only medically rehabilitated, but educated, trained, counselled, and placed in employment. He is not just fitted for work—we help find suitable work for him.

In addition, with the co-operation of the voluntary tuberculosis associations, families are looked after in the meantime, so that the case of the breadwinner's or home-maker's recovery is not delayed by worry and concern for the family, or such psychological blocks.

I was very interested to hear the remarks of my hon. friend from Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn) concerning rehabilitation. I would like very sincerely to commend him for the study he has obviously given this matter. I am sorry he is not in his seat at the present time, but it is so seldom that I have the opportunity to say anything nice here, in this setting about him.

I also want to say to him we have studied long and carefully the British Act, and have considered its value or what value it would have here. So far we do not believe it provides the desired end. Employers there are taking their share of so-called "disabled" and rehabilitated workmen, but a very broad interpretation is being put upon "disabled" and rehabilitated" by them and the really difficult problems of rehabilitation are just as hard to solve there as they are here.

I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that we, by no means have because of this, completely washed out such a possibility, but will continue to study it and other possible ways of improving the lot of the rehabilitated person.

I would be remiss if I neglected to note that labour, industry, voluntary groups, individuals and the special service branch of the national employment service have all co-operated with us to the full in this matter in every way possible.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, here would be a good time to advise the House that we propose to expand the rehabilitation services in our own department this year, and place even greater emphasis upon the rehabilitation of the mentally ill. We know this will be a difficult and probably discouraging field, but it should be a fruitful one and a most challenging undertaking.

All this is but one further step into this great and rather neglected field. Perhaps it is not quite fair to say rehabilitation has been, or is, a neglected field. I think the greatest difficulty is the lack of co-ordination, correlation and direction. To correct this lack, I hope to make some definite moves during the coming year.

A new item appears in my estimates this year, Mr. Chairman, an item of $35,000 for physical fitness study. A good deal has been said about this, and I think I am being eminently fair when I say a good deal of ridicule has been heaped upon this—or rather, the small budget sought.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) directed me to get into this field—and I would like it to be a matter of record that this direction was given me in May 1959—and I cannot believe—although I am often impressed with the perceptive powers of the hon. Prime Minister—I say I cannot believe he anticipated the speech made by the Duke of Edinburgh—and I happen to know he did not write the speech.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): It was an election year.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: But my hon. friend will note that nothing was said about it before the election. He knows that very, very well. Yet, when the hon. Prime Minister so directed me I thought perhaps I might need a budget to begin with of the order of probably $500,000. But I knew nothing about physical fitness except in a vague way. So, after consulting many authorities who knew a very great deal about it, on their advice I have chosen to go at the programme in this way.

One of the remarkable things I have learned is that physical fitness means something different to almost every person one talks to about it. To some it means gymnastics, to some swimming or hockey, or skating or squash or ballet or boating or riding—and so I could go on.

One thing I did determine, Mr. Chairman—and on this I hope to stand firm—it does not and will not mean the subsidization of any one particular sport or athletic activity. The experience of the older cultures shows that the best and most physically fit are developed from, or arise from, a broad-based, well rounded-out programme.

Personally, I believe it is best explained or defined by the old quote—Mens sana in corpore sano—"A sound mind in a healthy body."

Thus, in practical application it begins—at least in my thinking—with prenatal care, that the unborn may be given every opportunity humanly possible to be born fit. Then it continues through infancy, childhood, right up through life. If a sound programme of physical fitness is developed and followed, I have no fear that outstanding athletes in various activities will not come to the surface. I have no fear either that there will be any lack of encouragement for them when the time comes. I would far rather see, Mr. Chairman, every child in Ontario have the opportunity to be well-developed and fit physically than to see great emphasis put upon the development of small numbers of outstanding athletes—no matter how much glory they bring to our country.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Minister suggesting that they are incompatible, or that he is suggesting his personal preference?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no, no. I am not suggesting anything about incompatibility.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I would hope not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, nobody even suggested incompatibility. I do not know how the hon. leader of the Opposition even read it into my remarks.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, is the hon. Minister not interested in competitive sport?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course I am. I just told my hon. friend that, if we developed a broadly based programme, those interested in competitive sport will rise to the top—cream always rises to the surface—so the cream of the athletic physically fit crop will rise to the surface also. But as long as I am Minister, I am not going to sponsor—at least, I am not going to suggest to this government—that we should subsidize, particularly to the exclusion of a broadly based programme, only small numbers of outstanding athletes.

But what I have said so far does not explain the small budget. My studies showed that a very great deal is being done—but again in something of a hit-and-miss manner. Many schools have excellent programmes—cities and towns, and even small communities, have well-organized activities. For example, the city of Toronto has a broad and extensive programme. I mention it here only because I have learned more about it in the past few weeks. But others, I am sure, have equally good programmes: service clubs, the legion, labour organizations, 4-H clubs, and many others have well-planned projects which have been run successfully for many years.

But again there is lack of co-ordination, direction and leadership. These are obvious, but there are other defects and deficiencies less obvious.

So, Mr. Chairman, I have asked a very modest sum to set up a small study committee to ascertain what is now being done, what needs to be done, how it should be done, and anything else necessary to assure that the programme we adopt will have great likelihood of success.

I hope my hon. friend from York South (Mr. MacDonald) will not accuse me of stealing if I borrow a phrase he used recently—I want to get all the pieces to this huge jigsaw puzzle—namely, the physical fitness programme now in operation—laid out in such a way that it might be completed.

I think we will all agree that the foundation of any structure is most important to the stability of the structure, although it is not always the most costly part of the structure. I want this programme to be well and surely founded.

I have in mind the short-lived national physical fitness programme of the 1940's. I do not want this Ontario plan to fall by the wayside as that did. This will take a little longer, but I have no intention of asking this House for huge sums of money to spend for the sheer joy of spending—no matter how pleasant a pastime that may be. I want to feel the people of this province will get a good return on any money they may entrust to my department for such investment.

There are many other phases of the work of my department which I am sure would be of great interest to the hon. members. But it is all but impossible to deal with all of them here.

However, before I begin to deal with the separate votes in my budget, I would like to mention two other items: First, training of personnel; and second, research.

For many years, the department has encouraged personnel training by bursaries, fellowships, and staff appointments for in-service training, as well as carrying on courses for training of staff for the Ontario Hospitals and hospital schools.

At present, undergoing training on bursaries from the department are 38 physicians training in psychiatry, 12 psychologists, 5 social workers, 12 psychiatric nurse supervisors, 6 speech therapists, 3 mental health teachers, and 2 occupational therapists.

We train all our own attendants and nurse-aid staff.

We have a school for occupational therapy assistants. We have a school for laboratory technicians which has built up an enviable reputation and which I have good reason to believe is now continent-wide.

In addition, we operate courses for certified nursing assistants which are to be greatly expanded this year. Then, of course, we have 3 training schools for registered nurses. We are studying the possibility of extending this branch still further this year.

Research is another matter about which a good deal of misinformation is circulated.

As I said a few weeks ago, in the mental health field we have spent over $250,000 in basic research, and a sum difficult to estimate in clinical research.

In addition to that, several items in my budget go almost entirely for research, for example:

Heart foundation	$100,000*
Banting and Best	30,000
Cancer foundation and institute (province)	400,000
Multiple sclerosis society	2,000
Research and provincial labora- tory	125,000
Total	$657,000

*In supplementary estimates.

In addition to all this, approximately $1.25 million of federal money is being spent on research under the direction of The Department of Health, which after all is Canadian money and 50 per cent. of it coming out of the pockets of the people of Ontario—$400,000 matching grant for cancer, and $850,000 medical research for other purposes. Thus we have for a grand total of the money we ourselves are spending for research and the money provided by the federal government and spent under the direction of my department the sum of $3,157,000.

Again, I would point out that our research programme is very much a part of the greater world-wide programme in many fields of medical and related sciences, and should be viewed in that light. I would be less than human if I did not say that I would like to have more money to spend. I believe my first responsibility is to see that the monies, which I now intend to ask this House to approve, should be well and wisely spent in the interest of the health of the people of Ontario.

On vote 601:

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make just a few general remarks as to the estimates of The Department of Health.

Naturally, Mr. Chairman, we are all happy to see that, for the first time, the illness caused by tuberculosis is on the decline. We are certainly all hopeful that the money saved that would normally be spent on TB can now be turned to fight the other ills that plague our people here in the province.

I think that the success the province has had in TB is a good example, and that we can turn our minds and our efforts to fight things like cancer and mental illness and assist general health.

But when the hon. Minister brings to mind that he is spending this year $92,215,000 on health, I wonder if this is the true picture of the programme for the year.

I say this because, Mr. Chairman, each year since 1954, The Department of Health comes down with a budget, and then always has had a supplementary estimate. These supplementary estimates are not just small amounts, they are up in the millions.

For example, from 1954 right through to 1958, the supplementary estimates were over $8 million. Then in 1959 it was over $5 million. Not so long ago, in this session, we voted over $6 million as supplementary estimates in The Department of Health.

Now, I can understand something coming up in a particular year. But to go on in this way since 1954, I would say, indicates that the department, in making its estimates, does not give us a true picture when they come into the House and ask us to vote for the whole year.

I would say, in looking over the estimates, Mr. Chairman, that each following year, when the regular estimate is submitted as a figure, it is always somewhat below the amount of the ordinary revenue spent in the preceding year, exclusive of the supplementary estimates. There again we really do not get a true picture of what the department plans to do.

I would also like to point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is also apparent that, this year, the Ontario hospital services commission have planned and did not increase the expenditures of this department.

The regular annual increase that we have had this year is consistent with preceding years in that the budget has increased at a certain rate because of more hospitals, more beds and more patients. All of these are things which we are anxious to see in the improvements that will enable our hospitals to take care of a greater number of people who are ill.

But the fact that we have increased gradually at a certain percentage, in the way of more hospitals and more beds, and the fact also that this year's estimates are very similar in their increase, is evident that the Ontario hospital services commission has not cost this province a cent because we have had to pay the TB expenses prior to this time.

So I would say that, unless the commission has not shown us their complete picture at this time, it is certainly evident that this province was able to carry a hospitalization plan without any difficulty at all.

The success of that hospitalization plan, Mr. Chairman—a success which this present government now brags about—should be proof to us that we can do more in the way of giving the people of this province more protection in the way of medical expenses and drugs.

In looking over the estimates, Mr. Chairman, I was very disappointed, because I was looking for something, in the remarks from the hon. Minister, which would tell us that the government would do something towards increasing out-patient and diagnostic services. In other words, I hoped he would say something about adding them onto the hospital plan, because hon. members recall in the Throne speech it was said that the government was going to see what could be done in that regard.

But I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that the Throne speech on this point—as on so many points and like the Throne speeches have been in so many years in this government—is giving us just a lot of wordy goodies that we cannot really take as a practical programme.

I am sure that if the hon. Minister of this government had any intention of improving the health services in this province, under the health scheme, he would most certainly have provided for it in the estimates, or told us about it in his remarks. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this government has no intention either now, or in the very distant future, of doing anything to improve the present health programme in this province.

As I said in the Throne speech—and I repeat again—we will never properly solve the health problems in this province until we have a comprehensive prepaid plan. And we will never meet the problems of medical costs or drug costs until we have an all-out programme for health.

That is why I am glad, in the Liberal party, it is something we can work towards having in this province.

It is a regrettable thing that, in spite of the success of hospitalization, this government will not do a thing, that it continues in the old Tory way of just pussyfooting along until maybe an election is in the offing.

Mr. A. Crossman (St. Andrew): What was the Liberal way?

Mr. Trotter: I would like to point out to this House, through you, Mr. Chairman, that the government, even in a small way, should have done something to help those in the lower income groups to pay their premiums for the health programme.

I admit that $4.20 a month does not seem a lot to many people, but there are the older people who do not have the wherewithal. They are not necessarily on pension. There are instances where people were paying a pension programme over a number of years, and now find that, with the higher cost of living, their pension amounts to very little. Yet they do not come under any government scheme.

For example, I have had brought to my mind an instance where a certain gentleman, living in Hopeville, Ontario, gets a pension of $49.98 a month.

His objection—and I think it would be the objection of many people in this category—is that he has to pay his premiums on the health plan 3 months in advance. And this fellow, who is getting $49.98 a month, said: "Each 3 months I am required to pay the hospital premium of $16.80 for the next quarter." This reduces his means for that month to $33.18 and this means that a man and his wife are required to live on $1 a day during that month.

I imagine, Mr. Chairman, there are many people in this province in the same situation. I think any system of health that we can have in this province should certainly take care of the lower income groups in a much better fashion.

Here is an instance of a man who has worked all his life, who has never had to take charity, who has never received anything from the government. But now, because of the higher cost of living, he finds himself in a most difficult situation. I would like to bring this to the attention of the hon. Minister of Health and to this House. Here again, such a situation could be covered if we had a comprehensive prepaid health scheme.

Nothing was mentioned by the hon. Minister about the high cost of drugs. I know the speech from the Throne indicated that we will be asked to do something to investigate it. But hon. members would expect these remarks to come from the hon. Minister of Health, and I am rather disappointed.

I feel that we are going to get the usual treatment from this government that nothing is going to be done on the subject. I hope I am wrong in that respect, but I see little hope from this government of getting any action—either now, or in the very distant future.

There was one other matter which will come up in the estimates, and that is the problem of the shortage of nurses in this province. And I think, Mr. Chairman, that one of the main reasons why we are short of nurses is simply because of the poor pay that the nurses get. I understand that even the nurses employed by the province of Ontario begin at $3,240 a year, and that they can go as high as $3,750 per year.

Well, when we consider what a young girl can get in business today, without having any special training, there is not going to be much attraction to take up nursing. Or if girls do take up nursing, they will be more apt to head for the south. Consequently, unless the provincial government is willing to take more action in providing bursaries in assisting the girls who want to take up such training, to make nursing attractive to them, to see that they get better wages, we are always going to have a serious nursing shortage in this province.

And I say to you, Mr. Chairman, it is the responsibility of this government to do something about a problem that is serious, and is going to get worse unless action is taken now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did want to make just one brief mention of mental hospitals. I know we have discussed the problem here in this House, and no doubt we will be discussing it more. Also, I am glad to see that the hon. Minister has taken such an interest in this subject, he has more or less had to, from the pressure he has had from the public, and also from this side of the House, to look into the problem.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is nonsense. Mr. Chairman, I began—

Mr. Trotter: I am talking, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Just a minute, on a point of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman.

I began to take an interest in mental hospitals as soon as I became Minister of Health, and before I heard a word from the hon. members on the opposite side of the House—

Mr. Trotter: It may be that the hon. Minister has taken an interest, but certainly this government for 17 years has neglected—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We have done more than the Liberals ever thought of doing.

Mr. Trotter: And the hon. Minister would not be having the difficulties he is having today if he had taken action years ago. The problem of mental health today is serious because the subject has been neglected year after year after year. I am not blaming the hon. Minister personally, but I am certainly blaming this government here, and there is no point in this government trying to hide behind him and saying that they have always had an interest in the subject.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member had better read my last speech.

Mr. Trotter: All hon. members have to do is to read the speech from the Throne, and it is quite interesting—the trouble is it is a wonderful document but they do not live up to what is in it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is a momentous document.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Trotter: I do want to point out to the hon. Minister—and I think I see signs of it in the estimates—the importance of keeping up even the private societies who have taken an interest in retarded children.

I say this because, no matter what side we might take in politics on this question, I think the people who have really brought it to public attention are those families who have suffered simply because they had these children that were retarded.

They formed their associations, and it is as a result of a lot of their work that we are now familiar with the problems that face the province in mental illness, and especially with regard to retarded children.

I feel that the government should do a great deal in building hospitals. But I am also glad to see that the hon. Minister said, in a speech of a year and a month ago, that we need smaller hospitals, because it keeps them close to the community, it keeps them close to their families, and it also keeps up public interest. Indeed, that is what we need in the subject of mental health today—public interest. And if we can give any possible increase in grants to the private societies and work along with them as a government I think we will do something toward relieving the mental health problem.

Now, there is one matter I would like to bring to the attention of this department through you, Mr. Chairman. It is the problem of fluoridation and the subject of fluoridation. There is nothing more typical of the pussy-footing and neglect, in trying to put off, and failing to meet, problems than this government has shown in the problem of fluoridation.

Mr. Grossman: What is the policy of the hon. member's party on fluoridation?

Mr. Chairman: This is a subject that is out of order.

Mr. Trotter: No, it is a subject of health, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, this might not be the time to raise this point, but I suggest to you that no subject—no matter whether it is under Royal commission or not—is out of the purview of this particular House. Now, it is true we have often made that general reference, but I suggest at no time is any subject out of order in this particular House.

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I take that for your submission, Mr. Chairman. I have often been concerned about it myself. Certainly it is true that it has often been said that, if this House has the authority that we suggest it has, no subject at any time is out of order. I submit that to you.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I am sorry, but subject to the rules of the House, I think there are many subjects that are out of order—I cannot take that wide a view.

However, I will let the member for Parkdale carry on.

Mr. Trotter: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Approximately a year ago, this government appointed a commission to investigate the problem of fluoridation. I believe now they are going to have a meeting next May 2. But it has taken them all this time—therefore I am quite convinced that the reason why the commission was appointed was merely for the government to avoid the problem during the election campaign.

When we have a problem, Mr. Chairman, in this country, where even such organizations as the health league of Canada, will tell us that there are only 5,300 dentists in Canada, and that over two-thirds of the population in Canada lack proper dental care, and therefore it is certainly time that we should take advantage of every possibility of improving the dental health of the people in this country.

We are going to improve the dental health of the people in this province, and in this country, only by starting with the children, because fluoridation has been recommended by every outstanding dental and medical association in Canada.

When we come to the problem of fluoridation, as far as the universities are concerned, fluoridation has been endorsed by the heads of departments of preventive medicine in 10 Canadian and 65 American universities.

I will not take the time of this committee, Mr. Chairman, to list the names of the groups here that have proved, beyond reasonable doubt, the importance and the necessity of fluoridation to protect the dental health of the people of this province. But I will name just a few, including the Canadian dental association, the Canadian medical association, the health league of Canada, and the national council of women of Canada.

I cannot understand why the government, having the medical authority it can turn to, will completely ignore this subject. Not only do they ignore the subject and keep putting it off, but even the committees that vote to have fluoridation are now refused by this government the right to put it in.

I think, if we are going to improve dental health, if we are going to cut costs, that this government should at least make it possible by legislation for those various communities, who have sense enough to do the best they can for the children, to fluoridate their water if they wish to do so.

It is, I think, Mr. Chairman, an indication of how this government moves so slowly, how it pussyfoots around. The government's attitude is typical in these estimates, as in those of so many other departments. As we go down the estimates, we will have the opportunity to bring to the attention of the hon. members of the Legislature the various items that should be discussed.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I first want to congratulate the hon. Minister on his very able presentation, and also thank the officials of his department for the co-operation I have received throughout the year.

Mr. Chairman, in the estimates before us, we are asked to consider one item of $30 million which is roughly about one-third of the total estimates of The Department of Health—the hospital services commission.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I should have made this clear to the hon. members when I was dealing with it—this vote is not to be dealt with today, because of the unavoidable absence from the country of the chairman of the commission. The whole matter of the hospital services commission will be dealt with separately.

Mr. Thomas: Fine. Mr. Chairman, I was going to appeal to the hon. Minister that I think that that vote should have been held over, outside of the circumstance that he has just mentioned, so that the hon. members of this Legislature would have an opportunity of learning more about the affairs of the commission. I think that vote in any case should have been held over until some future time.

Mr. Chairman, the thought has often puzzled me as to how much this government is contributing towards the hospital plan for the people of Ontario. Over the weekend, I have done a little delving into the public accounts, and have come up with some very interesting and intriguing figures.

We heard last year from the hon. Prime Minister that the plan would cost approximately $256 million, and that it would be met in this one way: one-third from the federal government, one-third from the provincial government, and one-third from the premium holders.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in the estimates this year there is a direct contribution to the commission of $30 million, but I want the hon. members to notice, in that item, that there is one item of $10 million for hospital construction and this, prior to the introduction of the plan, was assumed by the provincial government. This was, of course, paid in grants to hospital boards, so much a bed for new construction.

But I am going to give the government, on this occasion, the benefit of the doubt, and credit them with a contribution of the full $30 million.

In the estimates of the department for the coming year, we have the tuberculosis division of $7,013,600; for mental health, $46,055,000; a total of $53,068,600. So, plus the $30 million to be given to the hospital services commission, there is a total contribution of $83,068,600. That is, on the face of it, just a little more than one-third.

I want to give you, Mr. Chairman, the other side of the coin.

According to the public accounts for the fiscal year ending March, 1959, we find the following under the heading of The Department of Health: For tuberculosis, $6,382,081; mental health, $35,803,077; and a contribution to the hospital services commission of $4,625,000.

This contribution to the commission was, I presume, to finance the commission for the first 3 months of the operation of the plan.

But during that time—the fiscal year ending March, 1959—there was a revenue received by the department from patients confined in these hospitals of $3,308,254. This, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, would help to offset the contribution of $4,625,000 for the commission for part of its first 3 months of operation.

The total spent by the government on these two services, for the year ending March, 1959, was $43,501,904. This amount was spent on these two items before the hospital plan was introduced. Therefore, I think it is most unfair, Mr. Chairman, to regard this as a contribution to the hospital plan.

The assessment of this financial picture, as I see it, is this: If we are budgeting for $50-odd million for mental health and TB, but only spent $43,501,904 for the fiscal year ending March, 1959—and even if we do consider this additional amount as a contribution to the hospital plan, an amount of roughly $10 million—I submit to hon. members the actual cost to this government is certainly not one-third, or in the region of $80 million, as suggested by the hon. Prime Minister.

These figures were obtained from the estimates before us, and those obtained from the public accounts for the fiscal year ending March, 1959.

I found out that the total contribution of this government to the hospital plan is only between $40 million and $45 million. Therefore, I submit to you, sir, that either the contribution of the premium holders is too high or, better still, the services should be extended.

One further question I want to put to the hon. Minister is this. If a person, registered with the hospital services commission, is committed to a mental hospital or tuberculosis hospital, is the commission billed for the maintenance of such a patient?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): May I ask the hon. Minister a question relating to the statement he made in introducing his estimates, Mr. Chairman?

I believe he said that something like $2 million is being spent on research, counting grants received for the purpose from the federal government. I was wondering if the hon. Minister would care to break that figure down a little bit and give us some indication of the types of research on which that money is being spent.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, with the hon. member for Oshawa's indulgence, I would like to leave discussion on his question until this vote comes up. Is that satisfactory, sir?

In the case of the hon. member for Woodbine, it would be rather a sketchy breakdown. We can—

Mr. Bryden: Well, a sketchy one would be satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Most of the monies provided by the federal government, and spent under our direction, are for research projects carried on usually by the university. Here is a list of some of them:

Rehabilitation of mental health patients; institute of child study; study of psychoneurotic factors in morbidity; studies of basal ganglia; tissue components in emotion; psychophysics in mental illness; studies in mental deficiency; studies in mental illness; investigations of recurrent mental disorders; research diagnosis in schizophrenia; studies of forensic patients; tranquillizing drugs; other projects on tranquillizing drugs; the study of mongoloid imbeciles; sexual deviation; learning and emotional processes; neuro-psychiatric diseases in children.

Other such projects are metabolic aspects of mental deficiency; visual motor perceptual processes; Rorschach studies; group psychotherapy; emotion and mental diseases; somatic and psychological symptoms and metabolism; associometric relationships; forensic clinic outpatients; attention and learning in elderly people; schizophrenia; insecurity scale; clinical investigation of nervous system; personality change; social isolation in normal and feeble-minded children and social organizations.

Mr. Bryden: These projects are mainly undertaken, are they, by people in the university?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Largely by university people.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to query a few small points in connection with the points the hon. Minister has just dealt with.

Do I conclude that, since a study of sex deviations is included in this list, that, in effect, he is doing research on a project which I have thought, up to now, was in The Department of Reform Institutions?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We are not doing this. This has been approved for someone, I presume under Dr. Stokes at the Toronto psychiatric hospital or Dr. Grey at the forensic clinic, where all sex deviates, I believe, coming before the Metropolitan Toronto court are seen; is that not so? It is in connection with this. It is not our own institutional research.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, in this same connection of research—item No. 4 of vote 601, medical and other research, and so forth, $10,000, what is that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This year the costs of the fluoridation investigation committee are being paid out of this vote and any expenses which will be incurred before this House rises, for physical fitness.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, we were really in order talking about fluoridation then, eh?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, we are providing the money to pay for it and they are certainly working.

It is true that it seems a lengthy process. But, as I tried to point out last year, research is not a matter that one turns off and on as one does the tap. It is very easy, and it is understandable, for many of us—lay and professional alike—to talk in a rather off-hand and easy going manner about research. But there is a great deal more involved in it than even I can comprehend.

As I pointed out last year, research into the common cold, for instance, has been going on for hundreds of years, and I do not think we are one bit nearer the perfect answer than we were when we started it. But I do assure the hon. members that this fluoridation committee is working.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some general observations with respect to this matter, and I should like to conclude by asking the hon. Minister some questions.

I might say at the outset that I am somewhat hesitant to approach this subject, and yet I feel the hon. Minister will welcome the opportunity to clarify a situation which has been brought to my attention, and which I believe has been brought to the attention of The Department of Health and the appropriate Ministers at various times.

Now, I might say that the information which I wish to bring has not been documented in the manner in which the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) brought forth his information. I do not have any affidavits to substantiate it, since most of it was given to me yesterday.

However, it appears that it should be brought forward at this time, and I refer to regulations and orders which were given with respect to the removal of bodies in the Trinity graveyard at Grimsby.

If the information which I have been given is correct, it should indicate considerable concern upon the department charged with the responsibility, because it would appear that several breaches of The Cemeteries Act have been committed. In an endeavour to not be too lengthy, I would like to give the facts as they have been given to me, and I would like to conclude by asking the hon. Minister some questions with respect to this situation.

I understand that, in a graveyard in Grimsby, permission was given to move the graves from one location to another. My information is that the provisions of the Act were not carried out, due to the failure on the part of the government to provide proper supervision.

I have photographs which have been given to me which would indicate that several of the tombstones were not properly replaced as set out in the terms of the Act. They were thrown in a pile. I understand one of them was dumped on the beach, in the Lake Ontario area, and later recovered, but not until after it had been photographed by one of the relatives of the deceased.

I also have photographs which have been handed to me which show a pile of some 103 of these tombstones smashed, and lying in a general pile, and not as set out in the terms of the Act which requires that they shall be moved, and the base shall be protected and preserved, and that they shall be replaced on the proper base.

My information is that some of these bodies were removed by means of a bulldozer.

I am also told that some of the bodies, which had been contained in hermetically sealed caskets, were removed from the caskets contrary to the provisions as set forth in The Cemeteries Act.

I have a picture that has been submitted to me which indicates that some 20 to 30 tombstones were used as a base for a ramp which was built, again contrary to the terms of The Cemeteries Act.

I hope that the information which I have given is not true, but the picture has been forwarded which indicates that one of these tombstones was even used in a barbecue pit.

Now, I do not like to bring this up, Mr. Chairman. I do not have affidavits, and I am sorry, I would have asked for them except for the fact that this matter was brought to my attention just yesterday afternoon.

The questions I would like to ask the hon. Minister are these: Upon what grounds did the hon. Minister recommend the removal of the graves in this Trinity cemetery? Were the relatives of the persons who were buried there notified by mail in accordance with subsection 3, subsection C, section 35 of The Municipal Act? I am wrong. Subsection 3, of section 2 of The Cemeteries Act. Excuse me.

I would like to know, were bodies left lying on the ground, placed in a garage, and subsequently placed under some steps for a period of some 3 to 4 weeks, contrary to conditions set out in The Cemeteries Act? I would like to know if The Department of Health had a supervisor on the job, to supervise the removal of these bodies as set out in The Cemeteries Act. And I would like to know, if there were any breaches of this Act, if any charges were laid, and if they were not laid, I would like to know why they were not laid, sir.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is a pretty good question.

Here is a matter that caused the department, I understand, a very great deal of difficulty. Unfortunately, I cannot speak about it with any great authority because it was very nearly, or all cleared up, before I became Minister.

However, I had some correspondence about it, but it was a fait accompli before I became Minister.

Perhaps it would be well to try to answer the hon. member's questions in chronological fashion.

It is my understanding, from the contact I had with them, that the terms of section 35 had not been met completely by the cemetery trustees, although the department had been assured that they were met. We did not have a supervisor, apparently, on the ground at the time of exhumation of the bodies, but I am assured that no bodies were found. Certain bones were found and it was questionable, in some cases, if they were human.

Now, I do not like to talk about this in a public assembly, Mr. Chairman. It is not the nicest type of subject to talk about, particularly when it is dealing with remains of those whose relatives are still living. I will try to get all the answers to these questions. Unfortunately, I have not got them, because as I say, I have no personal knowledge of them.

But I do know this, that my hon. predecessor himself went down to visit this site at the time when the storm broke, and I believe that everything was done then to make sure that any error that had been made by, or any neglect on the part of, the board of trustees had been corrected.

I do recall reading a letter from the minister of the church in question, and I cannot quote it exactly now, but the tenor of the letter was that he and his board of trustees were now satisfied that everything possible had been done to correct the errors that had been made.

I would point out that the onus for seeing that these things are done does not lie with The Department of Health but with the board of trustees; they must adhere to certain regulations. Apparently they did not do this completely, for reasons I cannot tell the hon. member because I am not familiar with it.

I will review the file again, if the hon. member so chooses, and be very glad to give him all the answers to the questions he has asked, that are available to me.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I must say that to a point I agree with the hon. Minister of Health, that this is not perhaps, best dealt with in public. The information which I have is that these people did endeavour to deal with this in another manner, that in many cases they did not even receive replies, that they approached 3 different members of the House at various times, including the hon. member for the riding in which this alleged offence took place.

I can quite appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that this is a subject, that we perhaps would rather not deal with.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that The Cemeteries Act was set out and enacted upon the books of Ontario for a purpose. It seems to me that the department has failed to insist that the conditions that are set down in the statutes of this province be complied with.

It seems to me that any other answer but a direct answer is unsatisfactory, and if the government has failed to insist upon the carrying out of the terms of this Act, then perhaps they should apologize to these people.

I can appreciate it is not nice, but I am sure that we can all realize the anguish caused.

In one instance, I understand from the party who came to me, that he had buried his mother just 10 years prior to this taking place, and I think it is something that cannot be snuffed out.

But, I believe, if there is an answer it should be brought forward in the proper manner, and I will accept a reasonable answer in private, but if not, I am going to insist on it being tabled in this House.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the hon. member, first of all, that the department has not the responsibility to supervise the exhumation of bodies when a cemetery property is being moved. I also repeat that, insofar as I know, my hon. predecessor took all necessary steps to see that the regulations were carried out. I understand he was assured by the board of trustees that this had been done.

This is a local matter, it is under the authority of the local board of the cemetery. I have to repeat that this happened before I became Minister, although I must admit that "I, at times, visit the sins of your fathers upon you, so that I can expect you to visit the sins of my fathers upon me," and I am quite prepared to accept this.

Mr. Trotter: It is the same old story.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is not the same old story. Of course it is the good old government, a good young government with progressive ideas.

I can assure the hon. member that I have taken every possible precaution to see to it that, so long as I rule over this department, the terms of The Cemeteries Act, insofar as the removal of dead bodies is concerned, will be adhered to strictly. I can only promise him that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a discrepancy here.

On the one hand the hon. Minister tells me that it is not the responsibility of his department to insist on The Cemeteries Act being carried out and, on the other hand, he stands up and says as long as he is head of this department he shall insist. Now, there seems to me that there is some sort of a discrepancy here, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is putting words in my mouth, I said to him that it is not the responsibility of the department to have a supervisor on the grounds. It is our responsibility to ascertain that the regulations are being adhered to, and this I understand my hon. predecessor did.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, obviously, Mr. Chairman, something was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course.

Mr. Wintermeyer: All right, the department either did not have a man down there, or was not advised.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We did not have a man there.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, why did they not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is not the responsibility—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Why should it not be?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Because we must change the rules.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, the hon. Minister had better change the rules, because this obviously is a situation that should not be permitted to occur a second time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, do the hon. members opposite want us to take all responsibility from the local authorities?

Mr. Wintermeyer: No.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Surely, in the name of reason, the local authorities can be left to carry on some of their own business. I am one of those who is very much concerned about the autonomy that we are taking away from the local people, and hon. members opposite constantly upbraid us for taking out of the hands of the local authorities power, authority, autonomy.

The Act states—section 35 of the Act states,

Where a cemetery has been closed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council as hereinafter provided; or the owner of a cemetery establishes to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council that it is expedient that the bodies therein should be removed therefrom; the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council may direct such removal in the manner and according to the procedure provided by this section.

Before the application for an order under subsection 1 is granted, the owner shall give notice of the application once a week for 4 successive weeks in the Ontario Gazette and in a newspaper published in the local municipality.

My hon. predecessor was given to believe that all these regulations, all the terms of this Act, had been adhered to. It was found later on, I gathered, that some of them had not been as rigidly adhered to as ought to have been. But, unless the hon. member wants the government to take over all the powers and responsibilities, take all autonomy out of the hands of the local authorities, then we will leave some powers in their hands.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Prudence is part of wisdom, and the hon. Minister is not demonstrating it today in that fashion.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, I have got lots of neighbours across the floor.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Well, Mr. Chairman, that is not just good enough. Here is this Cemeteries Act, and here are the regulations under it.

Section 31, for instance, says that no body shall be disinterred or removed from any grave for burial, other than with the approval and the supervision and the direction of the medical officer of health.

Now, what the hon. member behind me has said is that there were a whole series of offences under the sections and under the regulations, and the mere answer that the hon. Minister's predecessor understood that everything was all right, to my mind, is not enough.

If there were this whole series of irregularities, and this whole series of offences, surely the hon. Minister should be able to tell us who was prosecuted, outside, who did not do what they were supposed to do, and who was disciplined inside the department who did not do what they were supposed to do.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid I cannot tell the hon. member that because it all happened before I became Minister. I can only say this to him, that the medical officer of health is a local authority and this was a fait accompli before the complaints came to our department at all.

Mr. Singer: But the medical officer of health can act only insofar as the hon. Minister allows him to act.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not at all, the Minister has nothing whatsoever to do with this; and in a way I am surprised at the hon. member, with all his municipal experience, saying such a thing. The medical officer of health is a local servant. He is a servant of the local board of health.

Mr. Singer: He is a servant, but he cannot act without the hon. Minister's approval in the first instance.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: He acts according to the statutes and the regulations laid down for him, namely in The Public Health Act, and in all other Acts by which he is given authority, one of which is The Cemeteries Act. We do not say to him: "They are going to remove bodies from such-and-such a cemetery, go there at such-and-such a time." It is up to him to do his job in the locality where he is a servant.

Mr. Singer: The point, Mr. Chairman, still is that here is an Act, and here are a series of regulations, and obviously these things were not done. The hon. Minister is now saying he cannot immediately give the answer, that he will find the answer. That is fine. But if he is saying that, just because it happened prior to his time in this particular department, that is the answer, then I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that is not good enough. There were a series of offences here.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, that is eminently unfair. I have told the hon. member who asked the question that I would be glad to get all this information for him. But, since it did happen before my tenure of office, I am completely unfamiliar with it.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to take just a minute or two and express my concern, and echo the concern of the trade union movement, on the high and ever-increasing cost of medical services generally. Until we get the complete and national health programme, if it is going to be in the fullness of time, we are all going to have to be concerned with the increasing cost of medical services.

With the last two increases of the physicians' services incorporated and the Ontario medical association, the Hamilton district labour council and the Toronto and district labour council, asked the government to set up a board of inquiry to investigate the reasons for the increase, to see that they were justified in the eyes of the public.

Now, the trade union movement, over the past few years, has been negotiating health plans with management, and sits down with management and negotiates the amount of money management will pay towards the cost. The only thing they have to do with the physicians' services incorporated, or the carrier of the insurance plan, the services, is to look at their submitted fees and rates as scheduled.

I have the pleasure of sitting with the negotiating committee of local 1005 in Hamilton.

In 1954, we started negotiating a plan and it came into effect in 1955. It is based on a certain amount of money contributed by management and a certain amount by the employees. Before two years had elapsed, we found that we had reduced the management portion from 60 per cent. to 47 per cent. because of the increases in the services, and the agreement was formed with the management that they would only contribute a certain amount of money. So it changed the percentage.

Now, this field, I do think, is one place where the consumer has no influence over the pricing structure. And until we are able to have a board set up, and determine just what justification there is for these continual rising medical fees and costs, it is not going to be fair to the present plans, the public at large presently, or any contemplated plans across the country.

It might be absurd to suggest that their fees be set on a free competitive basis, but certainly a monopoly of this type, a pricing structure of this type, should be under the closest public scrutiny.

I would urge that, as soon as possible, a public inquiry be set up to study the justifications for the fees set by the different insurance companies, the physicians' services incorporated and the Ontario medical association as to their prices.

If the inquiry finds that they are justified, fine, the public should know that, and that all efforts should be made to acquaint the public with this information as to just why they are paying the fees they are paying for medical services.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with the first item under the estimates of The Department of Health, I would like to follow up on one phase of the more general problem which the hon. member for Wentworth East has just discussed.

It is a problem in which I am personally particularly interested, which, I think, is of vital importance to the health of the people of the province—and in which, I regret to say, the government seems to be taking very little interest. That is the question of the exorbitant price of drugs.

I have a motion on the order paper suggesting that a select committee of this House should be set up to inquire into the price of drugs charged in this province, particularly to the public at large. I am not insisting that that is the only possible way of tackling the problem. It is just a suggestion that I have made.

I do not know if the resolution will ever be discussed, but I would be quite prepared to consider some other method of tackling this problem, if the government has any other suggestions to make.

The most that I have heard from them to date was the rather cryptic reference in the Throne speech to the effect that they were conducting some sort of an inquiry into the cost of the drugs that they themselves buy. I have heard no further elucidation on what they have in mind, or what they had in mind when that sentence was put into the Throne speech. I had hoped that perhaps we would have some explanation of it today, under the estimates of the hon. Minister of Health.

However on the face of it, it appears that what the government is proposing is to set up some sort of an inquiry which will advise its right hand what its left hand is doing.

If that is necessary—and I am surprised to find that it is necessary—I certainly think it should be undertaken, because I would hate to think that various government departments, including The Department of Health, are paying the exorbitant prices which some of these drug companies are charging for preparations which actually cost them very little to produce.

Apparently the government does not know whether it is being overcharged on this matter or not, so it is suggesting some sort of an inquiry, the nature of which has not been made very clear.

However, Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to this House, and to the government, that an even more serious problem is that of the price which the public has to pay for drugs. I can think of no single item that is of more importance in the field of public health than the way the public is "getting taken" with regard to drugs necessary to the maintenance of health.

At the present time, I will not go through all the detailed information which has come to our attention, over the past number of months, of the outrageous profits being made by the drug industry, and furthermore about the outrageous amount of money they are spending—not on research as they say—but merely on promotion of their particular brands. That sort of information has been made public to a considerable degree, and I will not go through it again.

I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that since it appears that drug prices in this province, and more particularly in this city, appear to be among the highest, if not the highest, in the world, there is clearly some responsibility on this government to do something about the situation. I appreciate the fact that there are undoubtedly some constitutional problems involved, as far as remedial action is concerned. But I submit that mere investigation and publicity of the situation which has existed and continues to exist will have some remedial value in itself.

I would call the attention of the House to an item which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of February 13, 1960, headed "Cuts in Drug Prices Seen as Breakthrough." The first paragraph of the article reads:

Drug price cuts announced in the past few days were described today by pharmaceutical companies as normal practice following cost reduction.

And then it goes on to say:

But drug importer Jules Gilbert of Bristol Surgical Supplies, leading critic of high drug prices, charged it was a breakthrough of the high profit business following disclosures here and in the United States of overcharging.

Then a little later the report says:

Some druggists who received the letter—that is, a letter from a drug company announcing some reductions in prices of certain of its preparations—

Some local druggists who received the letter said this followed rumours that many prices would be cut following recent publicity about high drug costs. A spokesman for the company, however, denied the reduction followed any such pressure. He said the cut was the result of conditions that had caused similar reductions in the past, namely, lower cost of manufacture.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): The problem is solved, maybe.

Mr. Bryden: The problem is not solved. We have the companies telling us, after some some very unfavourable but highly merited publicity, they are telling us that they are making some reductions in prices because costs of manufacture have been lowered, which is undoubtedly one of the most outrageous propositions anyone ever tried to put across to the public.

The plain fact of the matter is that, in most of these products, the costs of manufacture are so low that if they eliminated them altogether it would not make any great difference in the price. It is clear that these cuts which have taken place—the few fairly limited cuts—have taken place because of the adverse publicity that this industry has received for its outrageous profiteering.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we should be following up on that, even if it is not within the powers of this Legislature to take take any legislative action to control this situation. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that merely further publicity about the practices in this industry would in itself be of benefit, would help to bring about still further reductions in price, because what we have from the industry so far is a start.

They have been discredited in the eyes of the public, as well they might, so they have made some reduction in some prices. And now they hope that that will mollify the public, and that they can go along with their normal profiteering practices at the expense of sick people.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bryden: Oh, yes.

Mr. J. F. Edwards: Some years ago, when cortisone first came in as one of the new drugs, the price was $38. Today it is $23.50. Now, is that a reasonable reduction?

Mr. Bryden: No.

Mr. J. F. Edwards: As a result of decreased costs and the quantity which is made? I think the hon. member should stick to something which he knows something about, instead of getting into the drug industry. One can get the price of anything and stir it up the way the hon. member tries to do it.

Mr. Bryden: I quite agree that I should stick to matters about which I know something, and this is a matter about which I know something. I will just give the hon. members one example.

I said I was not going to go into the long numbers of examples I could give, but here is one that happens to be in my file right at the time, so I will read it out. It is headed: "60-cent Drug Costs over $65." Dated January 30, 1960, in the Toronto Daily Star, UPI dispatch:

A major drug manufacturer conceded to Senate investigators yesterday that the public pay $65.83 for a tranquillizer drug his firm sold to government hospitals for 60 cents.

I agree that is a little worse than some of their efforts, but it indicates the sort of thing that is going on. I trust that government hospitals in this province are paying the 60-cent rate for that particular drug rather than the $65.83 one that is mentioned.

I have been asking some questions on this particular item, but have not received any answers as yet. Perhaps they will be forthcoming later.

However, Mr. Chairman, just to conclude my remarks on this particular point, I do submit that this is a matter of vital importance for the health of the people of this province, it is a matter to which the government clearly ought to be giving attention.

I regret to say that there seems to be no indication yet that it is really serious about the problem at all.

I would like to submit to the government that it should be planning some sort of public inquiry—whether of the nature I propose or not is not of major significance—into this very serious problem which, according to all the information available, is particularly serious in this province.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege, when we were having the discussion a few moments ago about the medical officers of health, the hon. Minister indicated that I should know better than to make the remarks I did in expressing about who can appoint them and who has any say in it. I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister the provision of section 33(1) of The Public Health Act which says this:

A medical officer of health is appointed only after he is approved of by the Minister.

—and finally section 36, subsection 4, which says:

A public health officer who has neglected his duty can be dismissed by the Minister on his own.

And I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is quite true.

Mr. Singer: All right. Well then, the implication of the hon. Minister was that I did not know what I was talking about in my remarks, when I suggested it is the medical officer of health who neglected his duty, and that the hon. Minister could have done something about it. My remarks were quite correct.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, that is not what the hon. member said at all. The hon. member said that we had been derelict in our duty in not seeing that the medical officer of health attended on the exhumation of those bodies.

The medical officer of health is appointed on the order of the Minister of Health, and he can be removed only for cause by an order of the Minister. Those things are perfectly true, but the Minister does not run around behind him telling him every little job he is supposed to do. We lay down the framework within which he can and must operate, and then his municipality may also pass additional by-laws which have our approval, and these too are a guide to him in the performance of his duties.

What disciplinary action was taken about this medical officer of health, if it were deemed necessary, I cannot tell hon. members. Again I have to plead ignorance because I was not the Minister at the time. I do intend to find out and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Singer: Well, that is an entirely different point, Mr. Chairman. The reason I rose on a point of personal privilege was because of the suggestion of the hon. Minister that he could not do anything, once the medical officer of health had been appointed, and I was just drawing this to his attention.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I must apologize, Mr. Chairman, if I left that impression. I know he can be removed only for cause, with the approval of the Minister, but there has to be cause.

Mr. Singer: We cannot let these people get out of hand.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 601 carried?

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): No, no, wait a minute. I have been wanting to get the floor here for quite some time.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question, Mr. Chairman. Why have the special grants of $150 a bed been cut to $75 per bed to all public general hospitals for retiring debt or capital acquisition or improvement? That is going to create a hardship in my estimation—it will in my municipality anyway—the cutting of this grant from $150 to $75. In fact, we thought it was going to be increased.

Mr. Chairman: May I ask the member for Windsor-Sandwich if this was not discussed in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. Belanger: We are still speaking on general terms, according to what I have to say.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The supplementary estimates have already been passed by this House.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): The hon. Prime Minister asked us particularly to save our comments until the estimates were before the House, because he wanted to get them through that day.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well then, would the hon. member mind saving them?

Mr. Nixon: I do not think any hon. member should be shut off from a question on those supplementary estimates, at this time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am quite prepared to abide by that, Mr. Chairman, although I still maintain that, according to parliamentary procedure, it is my submission that it is out of order, since the item has already been dealt with. Nevertheless, I ask that the hon. member withhold his question until the hospital services commission vote is being discussed.

Mr. Belanger: I wanted to ask the question when the supplementary estimates came up, but I never had a chance to say it because of the fact that we were told to discuss the matter under the health programme. So what are we going to do in this House? Who are we going to follow in this House? What are we supposed to do?

Mr. Chairman: Would the member for Windsor-Sandwich please withhold his question until the Ontario hospital services commission is being discussed.

Mr. Belanger: At that time, is that going to be considered?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will undertake to answer it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to make a general observation, and I think I am in order, to be followed by a question or two? I have perused the estimates, and if I have read them correctly, may I say that what I find is incredible, in view of the clamour and the current expression of public opinion urging treatment of drug addicts.

So I ask this question: Where, Mr. Chairman, in the hon. Minister's estimates, is there provision for the treatment, control or prevention of drug addiction? Where, specifically? Can the hon. Minister point out to me one penny being appropriated for the treatment of the drug addict in the province of Ontario today?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the only place where we treat drug addicts is within our mental hospitals and it is all lumped up in that estimate. There is no special sum specifically appropriated for that purpose, but it is in the mental health vote.

I have to admit very frankly, Mr. Chairman, as I signified the other day in discussing the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions, that our results with drug addicts have been most disappointing, to put it very, very mildly. I can only say that they are there; they are, contrary to the articles printed in the public press some weeks ago, admitted on voluntary application, or on committal.

Unfortunately, there is no satisfactory way yet apparently devised to let us get at the problem at the beginning. If, by some means, we could get hold of the people who have not yet become ill or mentally ill as a result of drug addiction, or who have not yet fallen foul of the law because of drug addiction, then I believe the picture might be a bit more hopeful.

Unfortunately, they have usually reached that stage before it is realized that they are drug addicts, or before the full force and effect of the drug has been noticed.

I can assure the hon. members that a very great deal of study is being given to this problem, in the hope that we can devise some way of getting at it—again I repeat—before the patient has become a confirmed addict. What the answer is, I frankly do not yet know.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I note the appropriation of $35,000 for the setting up of the physical fitness committee.

Has the hon. Minister set up that committee yet and, if so, would he give us the names of the members of that committee?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, it is not yet officially set up. The names will be given just as soon as that is done, and I hope that will be done before the House prorogues.

Mr. Troy: Not very long ago, the director of field services for the Canadian mental health association was in North Bay where we have an Ontario Hospital. In the view of this field director—and I am sure in the opinion of the hon. Minister and of those who know—we have there one of the finest mental institutions in the country. There is a weakness, as pointed out, the lack of an out-patients' clinic and for diagnostic care. Are there any such out-patients' clinics in our mental hospitals in the province? May I ask the hon. Minister that question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is yes, there are, and it is our intention to establish an out-patients' clinic at every one of the presently established hospitals as quickly as the funds and staff become available.

Mr. Troy: Thanks very much.

Now, just one final question. I understand some excavation work is being done in the vicinity of the Ontario Hospital. I noticed that statement in the Saturday edition of the North Bay Nugget. Is that the start of the long-awaited surgical wing that is to be built to that hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question. I do not do the building. My department does not do the building, so I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister told me some time ago that The Department of Public Works was bogged down. Does the hon. Minister have any information from The Department of Public Works as to when they are going to start that surgical wing which he, himself, has said is the heart of a hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have no such information yet, Mr. Chairman. I would like to advise the hon. member that the out-patient department in North Bay will be opened in July, 1960.

Mr. Troy: July, 1960. Thanks very much.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, first I would like to give the government credit for putting the programme of physical fitness or the study of the programme in such able hands. I doubt they could have selected a better man from the government side than the hon. Minister.

However, to say that I am disappointed about the extent of the fitness programme is to put it very mildly. My only thought is that $35,000 is for a study programme, yet the speech from the Throne made no mention of a study programme. It mentions, in fact, the supplementing of extensive health services and new physical fitness programmes would be inaugurated, and this certainly is not inaugurating a programme at all. It is inaugurating a study.

One would be led to believe that this province was going to inaugurate something unusual and sensational, and that finally the government has seen the light of day and the need for better fitness and health among the people.

Why spend $35,000 for a study of a problem when we already know this problem exists? That $35,000, as I mentioned before is equivalent to half a cent per capita, or the equivalent of one chiclet or half a stick of chewing gum per person.

Apparently the only fitness that we are going to get out of that study would be actually the facial exercise that people would get as a result of talking about that great programme that the government was going to inaugurate.

The government certainly knows that England, France, Sweden, and practically all of the European countries have gone through this study, that they have something that they could very readily copy and inaugurate, or even adapt or vary, if they wished.

In England, both parties before the election thought so much of the programme that they were willing to expend anywhere from £7 million to £11 million to supplement the programme that they already have in operation there.

All I can say is that Europe, that looks to us as a forward nation, must be probably laughing at the mere pittance that is being allocated for fitness in the province. They probably cannot believe that we here, in this bulwark of democracy, can be so far out in left field when the future of our nation's fitness is at stake.

If only from the dollar-and-cent standpoint—the benefits of physical fitness, the lessening of the needs of the various medical services and facilities—this programme should have received greater financial aid.

We prefer to pride ourselves in the numerous hospitals and institutions and so forth that we are able to construct to take care of the ill, rather than put our citizens into a state of physical, mental, emotional well-being. We pay attention to the after-feeling of the individual rather than the before. Our philosophy seems to be the cure rather than the prevention.

A study inaugurated by the Bell telephone people just recently certainly brought to point the idea of the absolute necessity for a programme.

May I, at this point, mention that we are, today, faced with a challenge of leisure, and we certainly know that leisure wrongly used—and certainly by young people—constitutes a real threat to society.

Now, I would like to first congratulate the hon. Minister on—which I was very glad to hear—the fact that he mentioned, in the outset of his speech, that no one sport or activity was going to be subsidized.

We, in the Liberal party, certainly would not want to see anything like that happen. We want a fitness programme for all, not for one type of physical activity. We want this to take care of the fitness, the well-being of all Canadian citizens, young and old alike. We do not want anything on a hit-and-miss manner, we want a good organized programme.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister how he plans on conducting the survey or the study here? I think he has already mentioned who was going to conduct it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I did suggest in my opening remarks that studies would be conducted by a group with wide interest in this field, and it would be left entirely for them to investigate and report upon this matter.

Mr. Newman: Has the hon. Minister any idea on what they plan on finding out?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, you see this is the difference between our thinking of research and the obvious thinking of some of my hon. friends. We do not say to committees, "This is the result we want you to produce, now you do the business." We intend to give them terms of reference, which will give them the widest possible latitude to find out all they can about this subject, and make recommendations to us on the basis of their findings what they think we should do.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know from the hon. Minister what the area of the study is going to be, because I do not want this to be bogged down the same way as the fluoridation issue was bogged down.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I put the hon. leader of the Opposition's mind at rest. One of the terms of reference is that a report will be in my hands on November 1, 1960, at the latest.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, does the committee have plans on going outside the continent in their studies at all? Is this among the terms of reference?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would hardly expect so, on $35,000.

Mr. Chairman, there have been so many and varied studies of what is going on in other countries, and I think that information has been very well documented in recent times. I think that all our study committee needs to do, so far as that is concerned, is to study that documentation. Then the biggest job, as far as I am concerned will be to find out what is being done in Ontario, and find out what parts of this huge jigsaw puzzle—with my gratitude to the hon. member for York South—are still missing, and then we hope that they will recommend that we supply those parts.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, apparently the terms of reference are going to be very vague. I just wondered if the committee has intentions of going down to Florida for their studies, because if they are, I would like to go with them. There is no idea of the area that they are going to cover.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I gather then, from this discussion on physical fitness, that the government has changed their mind about the very definite words in the speech from the Throne, where it says that the programme will be inaugurated.

Now, there are two other paragraphs in the speech from the Throne to which I would like to refer the hon. Minister, and find out a little more about. This is one:

Special measures are being introduced to provide for a large increase in the number of nurses and nursing assistants. Included in the list of new projects, for which funds will be required, will be a two-year training course for nurses which will commence next September. The certified nursing assistant programme is being doubled, and over 1,100 will be trained in our hospitals this year. There will also be an expansion of training schools in hospitals—and so on.

I wonder if the hon. Minister could explain to us where, in these estimates, the carrying out of the provisions of this paragraph are contained?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Vote 606.

Mr. Singer: The whole of it in vote 606 is—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We will come to that when we come to vote 606. Let us do things in an orderly fashion.

Mr. Singer: Well, now then, wait a minute. All right, if it is all in vote 606, we will come to it then.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, what is the current vote doing in vote 601?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is a grant to the registered nurses' association.

Mr. Singer: There is another paragraph here.

Further steps will be taken to widen treatment for alcoholism . . . Funds will be requested for experimental projects involving group therapy for first-offender drug addicts.

Now I wonder where that is.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In the budget of the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips).

Mr. Singer: The hon. Provincial Secretary?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes. The alcoholism research foundation is under The Provincial Secretary's Department.

Mr. Singer: And what about the drug addicts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The drug addicts, as far as my department is concerned, as already explained, are bound up in the mental health estimates. They are treated in our mental hospitals.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister about item No. 7, which has to do with the health service for the Ontario civil service. The estimate for this year is $103,500. It is $10,000 less than last year, and I am wondering if the hon. Minister can give us the reason for this. Since the civil service has expanded, one would naturally expect more money would be spent on this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The reason for the reduction is that, I believe, we equipped two new centres last year out of last year's budget, and we do not propose to open any new centres. The Department of Public Works paid for the equipment, and we had provided for it but did not need it, because The Department of Public Works provided the equipment when they gave us the space. We do not plan to purchase any equipment this year.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. Minister if item No. 11 has to do with the federal health grant? The estimate is $500,000 and I was wondering what it is expected to spend that money on this year. I understand that last year there was a similar estimate but the money was not used.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The money is always used, Mr. Chairman. This was explained last year. Indeed, I have been in this House now for 6 budgets and heard this question brought up every year.

It is rather a peculiar thing, but we pay for the project and then we claim the money from Ottawa. This is a revolving fund, and is always shown at $500,000. We approve a project, we provide the money for it out of the $500,000, then we claim it from Ottawa, it comes back in, goes into the bank and the $500,000 is made up again. So it is a revolving fund only.

Mr. Trotter: Has the hon. Minister any plans for it this year, what he is going to do with the $500,000?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The $500,000 will be used for exactly the purpose I told hon. members, a revolving fund. I hope next year there will be at least $500,000 again. The projects have all been approved, or submitted to Ottawa for their approval. As the money is needed for them, we will draw it from this $500,000, claim it from Ottawa, and put it back into the bank to make up our $500,000 again.

Mr. Trotter: Could the hon. Minister give us some idea what the projects are?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I read about 30 of them. Shall I read them again, Mr. Chairman? I read them. They are a matter of record in Hansard already today.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I know this has been explained many times, but one of the things I never understood is why we have to spend $500,000 each year. I can understand the principle of a revolving fund. But once we have made our contribution, it carries on.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right, we never do spend it. It is just a revolving fund we draw out and then put it back in.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In other words, to this extent the hon. Minister does not require an additional $500,000 over and above what he had last year?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No. We have found that $500,000 is a satisfactory fund to finance the project until we get the money from Ottawa.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, The Cemeteries Act, and matters related to cemeteries come under this department, and there is one question I would like to ask the hon. Minister.

Periodically, I find myself in receipt of still another letter from either the unions or management involved in the memorial manufacturing industry with regard to the situation that obtains in a number of cemeteries.

Mr. Chairman, cemeteries are non-profit-making organizations, at least some of them. There are others that are in the game for profit now, but I am referring to the non-profit ones, and as such they do not pay real estate taxes, they do not pay business tax, and yet the procedure has developed whereby some of these cemeteries are selling certain markers and tombstones.

The person who is buying these has to buy them from the cemetery authorities if they have a plot within the cemetery. The cemetery in turn is retailing the markers and the material from only one firm, and it happens to be an American firm.

It seems to me that these representations have a very great deal of validity.

Firstly, why should a non-profit-making organization, in effect, be operating as a monopoly in terms of where the purchase can be made? Secondly, why should the purchase be made only from a certain American company?

It seems to me that this is in violation of many of the business practices that this government pays tribute to, if not lip-service to, and also is an unfair kind of discrimination against our own workmen and industry in this field in the province.

I think I raised this in each of the last two or three years and no change is made. Can the hon. Minister explain how he defends the continuation of this practice, and whether or not the government is considering any change?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised the hon. member brought this up because—and I would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that there is still some hope for our hon. friend over there. As a Tory, and proud to be one, I have met these people, and I must submit, sir, that this to me is a very unfair practice. How we wrote it into the regulations I really do not know. However, I had nothing to do with the writing of the regulations.

Mr. MacDonald: Sins of the government.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do believe it came out of the findings or recommendations of the select committee.

However, I met the representatives of the monument manufacturers, or retailers, or whatever their business is, and have arranged that I shall meet them again for a complete and full discussion of this. This is a matter dealt with in regulations, and I have undertaken to meet them just as soon as possible after the session.

It is my hope that I will be able to do something for them, because I am a very strong believer in free enterprise. I am delighted indeed, Mr. Chairman, to see that my hon. friend is showing the effects of this session now.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make this little comment to the hon. Minister. This party believes in free enterprise—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Wonderful.

Mr. MacDonald: —really believes in free enterprise, and this is the rare occasion when the hon. Minister is not perpetuating monopoly enterprise because he wrote it into his Act.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to know that the hon. Minister is going to look into that.

I remember when I was a member of the select committee on cemeteries, some 3 or 4 years ago, we had some of these salesmen appear before the committee. They were selling these markers for the cemetery people. The prices were anywhere from $150, to sometimes $350.

I did a little investigating to find out what these things were made of. They were made of bronze, and weighed about 30 pounds. The actual cost of the material in the marker at 60 cents a pound was about $18 a marker. That was the actual cost of the material at that time.

I went to a friend of mine who was in the moulding business, and I asked: "How much would you charge to mould one of these things?" "Well," he said, "If I was getting $50 apiece for these markers, I would be making a grand profit out of them."

I am very, very happy to know that the hon. Minister is going to look into this. It is long overdue and about time.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the hon. Minister of Health and his very capable staff on their accomplishments in the field of health.

We have our system of hospital insurance, launched on January 1, 1959. It covers some 94 per cent of the people of Ontario. It protects our people from the fears and hardships related especially to long periods of hospitalization. It helps our hospitals in planning their finances, always a difficult problem.

It is a scheme debated for some 39 years by various Liberal governments. It is a scheme brought into being by Conservative governments both here and at Ottawa.

It was this present government which adopted a systematic scheme of hospital grants to help hospitals in their building programme. They have been supplemented by rehabilitation grants and in certain cases by special grants. The result is that, during the life of this government, our accommodation in general hospitals has about doubled.

Something which is very important lies in the fact that our hospitals have not been impaired in any manner by local management. We owe a great deal to the thousands of men and women who give their time and ability in the overall management of these institutions.

Again let me say a word about our mental hospitals.

The government has added over 600 beds in modern quarters at Orillia. A new hospital and school, holding 278 mental defectives, has been put into operation at Aurora.

When the Henry government when out of office back in 1934 they were building a new hospital school at Smiths Falls. What happened? The incoming Liberal government stopped the work, carted away and used the materials and eventually sold the site. This government acquired a new site and built a new hospital and school, which today houses over 2,000 mentally ill.

There is under construction at Cedar Springs still another hospital about to house 1,200 patients.

Dealing with mental defectives is one of the greatest problems of every health department in North America. Here in Ontario, we are working towards an adequate solution which is something more than the previous Liberal government ever attempted.

I should also like to point out that new mental hospitals are being opened up at Port Arthur and North Bay, with about 1,200 patients in each, something that people of northern Ontario will appreciate.

A health unit is described as a union between urban and rural municipalities to provide an efficient sustained community health programme. Let me say that the health unit in my particular part of this province is one of the greatest assets to any community.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister a question concerning cancer control.

In Look magazine, of last week I believe it was, there was a very interesting article on cancer treatment and research in the United States, and it pointed out that, while there were many organizations that are attempting to the best of their ability to get at this terrible disease, at the same time there seems to be some lack of direction from any one particular organization.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister under this item of cancer control, what direction we have in the province of Ontario at the present time.

I know that there are any number of people, and any number of local organizations, who are doing their best. For example, I would like to ask the hon. Minister who is the head of the cancer research for this province of Ontario. Who gives the direction to the various universities and people who are attempting to get at the root of the disease from which probably 1 out of every 6 of us in the legislative assembly will die?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is done by the Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation. All research projects are submitted to them and are studied and screened thoroughly by an advisory committee on research. In the main—indeed, I believe without exception—they are all heads of departments in the university teaching hospitals.

I think it might be a matter of great interest if some of the names were known: Dr. C. L. Ash, who is the director of the institute; Dr. C. H. Best; Dr. D. L. C. Bingham, professor of surgery, Queen's University; Dr. Frank Brien, professor of medicine, University of Western Ontario; Dr. Burr, director of radiotherapy at Kingston; Dr. Cannell, professor of obstetrics at Toronto; Dr. J. B. Collip, with a world-wide reputation in research, dean of medicine, University of Western Ontario; Dr. W. Ford Connell, professor of medicine, Queen's University; Dr. W. G. Cosbie, an outstanding gynaecologist in Toronto.

Others include Dr. J. G. Cunningham of our own department; Dr. Deadman of Hamilton, an outstanding pathologist; Dr. De Vries of Toronto; Dr. Ettinger of Queen's, the professor of physiology and dean of medicine; Dr. Ray Farquarson, the Eaton professor of medicine, University of Toronto; Dr. Ferguson, Connaught laboratories, Toronto; Dr. Gillie, Fort William; Dr. Green, Hamilton; Dr. Harrigan, and so on.

It is a very long roster of very imposing names in every branch of medicine.

Every project is submitted to this committee, and is very thoroughly screened before it is approved. Then when approval is given—again we come back to the $500,000 vote—the money is taken out of that, we claim it from Ottawa. The procedure very much is that, when we approve it here in Ontario, Ottawa gives automatic approval.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, is progress being made to control cancer and the heart diseases? What progress is being made, or could that be outlined in a short form?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid it could hardly be outlined in a short form. It is not enough to say that progress is being made. It is in both those fields, as witness the fact that people with cancer are living longer than they did before. That there are hopeful types of treatment. But to sum it up in so few words is really not to do justice to it.

I think that in the time I have available, I can only say that progress is very, very definitely being made. I do not know of any problem in medicine or surgery, in the whole of medical science—in the whole field of the healing arts—that has had such an array of outstanding talents and abilities brought to bear upon it as has this problem of cancer.

Heart disease is in very much the same category. A great deal is being done and, of course, we have new methods of heart surgery, a thing that was even 15 years ago laughed out of court as being completely and totally impossible. Now the surgeons are able to open one's heart surgically, and work on it for rather extensive periods of time—in light of the fact that the heart is the most essential pump of the body—and one is able to live a relatively normal life thereafter.

Mr. Whicher: I would just like to ask the hon. Minister, what liaison does he have with other jurisdictions? For example, does he liaison with American universities in connection with this disease, or English or European universities of any kind?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In the matter of research?

Mr. Whicher: In the matter of research.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We do not directly, in the department, control the research. This committee, in the name of the government and on behalf of the government of Ontario, controls the research that is going on.

They very definitely do this—representatives of all the medical schools in the province have liaison with their counterparts, not only on this continent but all over the world.

That is why I would like the hon. members to recognize that, although our research budget is less than $3 million, it is only a part of a tremendous pattern of research that is going on all over the world.

As I said when I spoke to the House last, medical research, fortunately, knows no barriers of geography, race, creed or anything else. We are part of a tremendous pattern of research going on all through the world.

Mr. Thomas: In respect of the physical fitness committee, does the hon. Minister think that prenatal care would be considered in that committee? I think that is important too, does he not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it could, but I would not expect that it would, because we have a division of our department devoting itself entirely to maternal and child welfare.

I mentioned prenatal care because, in my personal thinking, that is where it begins. But, if they come up with some recommendations that will help us to improve our system of prenatal care, that will be quite within their scope.

Mr. Thomas: In the light of the opinion of the hon. Minister, why did the government revise that legislation whereby the doctor could obtain a fee of $5 for the examination of a person on a means test basis, or something like that, or apply it to everybody? But there was a fee of $5 paid to each doctor, I believe. Why did they refuse that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would say I was a practicing physician at the time that was being done, and I would say it did serve a very useful purpose. It stimulated our people to seek early prenatal care. We felt that it did, and I think the profession went along with the government in this, that it had performed the purpose for which it was set up. Then we got out of that field and, of course, we got into a field of equal importance, although less is heard of it—the Rh testing of every expectant mother.

Vote 601 agreed to.

It now being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

On vote 602:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): How many counties in Ontario do not have health units, and why is this?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: Did the hon. Minister get my question?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): How many counties are there? Forty-two in Ontario, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: There are 38.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Thirty-eight? Five counties do not have health units—33 counties have health units, 5 have not.

Mr. Thompson: What about the 5, why have they not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I really cannot answer that question because it is a matter that must be sparked from the county basis, for the county to say for itself.

Mr. Thompson: Is it because of lack of leadership, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, we have very great county leadership, I have very great faith in municipal leadership. I have stated already, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. members that the stimulus must come from the county. If there is leadership lacking in the county, I have yet to see signs of it.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): What happened to the leadership of the province?

Mr. Thompson: For example, if I could ask this, Mr. Chairman, in connection with co-ordinated schools, there is definitely a sense of direction and encouragement on the part of The Department of Education. As I understand it, the hon. Minister believes in this principle of county units of health. He feels that it is a sound policy from an administrative standpoint as well as from getting equality of health service across the province.

I would be interested to know how the hon. Minister is going to encourage these other 5 counties. What does he feel he should be doing, or does he feel that he should sit back and wait until something happens with them?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think, Mr. Chairman, that our department, since this idea started up, has done everything possible from our end. The objection seems to be from a county level because of the costs. Now, the county does not do it, it is a group of municipalities within the county that sparks the movement. And then the county takes it from there on. At the present time, some municipalities—most of them rural, small villages and small urban areas—are paying perhaps 10 cents per capita for public health services. They will have a part-time medical officer of health, probably a part-time public health nurse and whatever part-time staff is necessary. It costs them a good deal more—I think, the last year's average would work out at about $1 per capita—to introduce the health unit services.

Now we have tried, to the limit of our ability, to point out to them what they gain by paying this extra money, but we have not been able to sell the idea until now. The Deputy Minister just advises me that 4 are now under active discussion. So that will leave us with one.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): What about the districts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The districts are covered by the province.

Mr. Troy: The district of Nipissing, for example—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The district of Nipissing has a health officer. Areas of the districts, where population warrants, are covered by medical health officers.

Mr. Thompson: Does the hon. Minister think that, with his influence that he exerts in this approach to county health units, perhaps he could influence the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) to have county welfare units? The hon. Minister of Health feels that it is a sound principle to have county units in health. Surely, after all, welfare—you may say I am off the subject, Mr. Chairman, but, public welfare still has a great influence in connection with the health of the people.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, my hon. colleague just tells me that there are 17 such welfare units. I would point out that there are very, very great difficulties in the way of establishing health units. I speak from very personal experience. For 10 years I have been trying to persuade my own village to get into the county health unit, and I have not been able to sell them yet.

Mr. Whicher: Well, why?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, they do not want to spend the money.

Mr. Whicher: Oh, no, I think the hon. Minister lacks the powers of persuasion.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, I will take lessons from my hon. friend, but for 5 of those years I sat on the village council and tried to sell the idea, but was not able to do it. The hon. member for Bruce states "lack of powers of persuasion," so I shall take some lessons from him on that, and hope that I can succeed. But, seriously, this is going forward.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Surely, the hon. Minister must admit that those counties with health units are having better health service than the 5 without. In other words, the question about which I would like to get an answer from the hon. Minister is this: Are there equal health facilities being given to all the counties in the province or not? It seems to me that some 5 are not getting the same facilities as the rest of them.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It will depend in large measure upon the local arrangements in the various municipalities of the counties. There is no county health unit in Frontenac-Addington, Carleton, Peterborough, Haliburton-Victoria, part of Ontario, Waterloo, part of Middlesex and part of Lambton, and Haldimand.

Mr. Singer: Waterloo? That is not 5, that is about 10.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Grey. This just cannot be up to date.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Now, some of these are partly covered.

Mr. Singer: Carleton, Haliburton, parts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, parts of those counties are in, 5 counties are not touched at all.

Mr. Whicher: What about Grey county?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Grey apparently has nothing marked in it—

Mr. Whicher: But that is the hon. former Minister of Health (Mr. Phillips)—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would suggest that I have to look for another teacher. The hon. member's powers of persuasion are apparently not so very good. But this is a service, Mr. Chairman, that the people themselves must seek. Now it is quite possible—and I do know this does pertain in certain townships—that they already have a very well-organized system and they do not want to change it. I happen to know that two counties neighbouring my hon. friend from Oshawa (Mr. Thomas), East Whitby and Whitby townships, have each built up, over the years, a very excellent public health service. Their people, I would say, are getting as much as, for instance, the people in Pickering township who come under the south Ontario health unit.

So the same conditions would pertain in many townships throughout these counties that are not covered by county health units. Because they have not got a county health unit, it does not necessarily follow that the public health service is not good or is not satisfactory.

Mr. Singer: But surely, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister must admit that in the 30 counties approximately—and I cannot quite follow the arithmetic because he said 5, and then read of 10—but in the 30 counties approximately that are getting health services, the government of Ontario is spending roughly $30,000 per county, if we divide this $1.1 million by 30. The other counties—the 5 or more that are not getting it—are getting nothing, so there must be better health services in the ones that are getting it, than the ones that are not. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that the province is favouring certain sections of the community as against others.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): I come from one of those counties where there is not a health unit, and I may say to the hon. member for York Centre that we let Metropolitan Toronto run their affairs as they see fit, and I suggest that he let some of these counties run their affairs as they see fit.

Some Liberal hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I can only presume from this that there are two classes of citizens in the province, the ones that get good health service, and the ones that get bad. And the ones that get good are predominantly Tory ridings.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer a question? On the principle the hon. Provincial Treasurer has just now enunciated, why does he not let those municipalities, which have voted in favour of fluoridation, go ahead and put fluoridation into effect?

Hon. Mr. Allan: What is that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are getting away from the point.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, there is a difference?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think the strongest point, Mr. Chairman, that can be put in favour of our encouragement of the small municipalities, to come into the county health unit system, is that we offer to pay, and they know that the province will pay 50 per cent. of the cost of their unit.

Mr. Singer: It looks as if we have two classes of citizens.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is a ridiculous premise.

Vote 602 agreed to.

On vote 603:

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he wants to discuss the question of nursing schools under this particular vote or under vote 606.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On vote 606, please.

Mr. Wintermeyer: All right. Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to public health nursing branch—that is vote 603—I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether his department has been in communication with the public health nursing branch of the municipality of North York or North Toronto—North York, yes—during the past few days?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is no.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well now, why, Mr. Chairman? Again, is this on the principle that the department has nothing to do with public health nurses in the respective community?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer is, Mr. Chairman, that we have absolutely no control over those people. If they want to fight with their employers about something which they believe to be an injustice, that is entirely their own business. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the provincial Department of Health.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, what do we spend $79,000 for?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, it is largely in a supervisory capacity. We do not interfere with internal operations or internal house-keeping matters in various municipalities. The nurses, who have a dispute with their board of health, have written me a letter advising me of it. It was marked "for information only."

I took it, read it, acknowledged it and accepted it as it was marked—for information purposes only.

The public health nursing branch in my department has several functions. It provides consultation and supervision to public health nurses employed by local boards of health, school boards and boards of education. On request, it will assist interested citizens' groups and local boards of health in the organization and development of public health nursing services to meet their needs, in keeping with generally accepted standards.

They report and interpret the programme policies and needs of the local health services to other divisions of the provincial Department of Health. This business of encouraging counties to get into the organized health unit is part of their job.

It is also their job to advise local supervisors regarding functions, standards, qualifications, personnel policies relating to public health nursing staff; to assist with and guide in service education programmes; to address public meetings, as requested, on matters of this kind; to work closely with all health and related agencies, with other departments within the government services; and to act in an advisory capacity to planning committees.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to ask just what is the relationship between this Victorian Order of Nurses and the public health nursing branch? What I am suggesting is this, do the Victorian Order of Nurses have to supplement the work of public health nurses and, if so, is this because public health nurses are not doing a complete job themselves? What does the hon. Minister see as the future of the Victorian Order of Nurses if he is going to have a comprehensive public health nursing branch across the province? Does he see a future for the Victorian Order of Nurses?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a very definite future for them, and even for an expansion of their services. I say this because the greater part of their time is occupied in providing home nursing services to the sick. The public health nurse does not usually come into that field at all. There is a difference.

But in certain localities, when the time of the Victorian Order of Nurses group is not completely occupied by home nursing services, they are often used on a part-time basis by the public health branch for public health nursing. But I still believe there is a need for their services and for an expansion of them.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in some areas the public health nurses are doing a more complete job, because they do not have the Victorian Order of Nurses, and in other areas, where there is the Victorian Order of Nurses, the hon. Minister does not have the public health nurses doing as much.

I just wonder whether the fact that it is almost double taxation for people—in the sense that they pay for the Victorian Order of Nurses, I presume, through community chest and other forms—yet they are also paying for a public health service. Does the hon. Minister see a conflict in this?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not believe so, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is a conflict. There may be in certain municipalities, where there is a highly organized well-staffed public health service and a good unit of the Victorian Order of Nurses. In those circumstances there may be some duplication of services. But I think essentially, across the province, there is a very definite place for both of them to operate fully and successfully.

Mr. Singer: Does the province give any grants to the Victorian Order of Nurses?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe that is done through public welfare. It was taken out of our department last year.

Vote 603 agreed to.

On vote 604:

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): On vote 604, I would like to ask the hon. Minister just why the amount seems to vary so much from year to year. This year, the amount as set aside for this field is $147,700 and in 1959 it was $201,000. In 1960, it dropped to $118,000, now it has started to come back. For what reason does it vary from year to year?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That year when it was $201,000—did the hon. member say 1959?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, in 1959 it was $201,000.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In 1959, it was $118,000 according to my book. No, pardon me just a minute, the estimate for 1960 was $118,000.

In 1959, when we ended up, we had to provide money to pay for the remainder of the accounts, to which my hon. friend from Oshawa referred—the payments to the poor doctors of $5 for every prenatal examination.

This year it is a little higher than it was last year because we are printing the baby book, The Tender Years, I believe we call it—which is out of print, and we have to provide new ones. It is a very popular book, and it is very much in demand by new mothers.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, why does the hon. Minister enter into that field of publication, when the federal Department of Health has so many books? They have dozens of books. Is this not a duplication of the service?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is one place where we lead, as we do in so many places. The federal people stepped into it. And we believe—and I say this in all sincerity—we believe that our book is better.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Minister get together with the federal publication authorities and agree on one set of books? Is it not a little silly to duplicate all these services?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, the federal people, of course, are doing this to help the provinces that have not been in the field, and largely provide a book for those provinces where one is not published under provincial supervision. I suppose we could get together with them and talk it out. It might be worthy of consideration. I will take it under advisement.

Vote 604 agreed to.

On vote 605:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Regarding item No. 3 under vote 605—in maintenance—I would like to know why the item was increased from $4,000 to $32,000 for this year.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the answer is that we are refitting and equipping a new railway dental car to put on the Canadian Pacific Railway line. We had two railway cars, one became “kaput” so we have been given another one by one of the railroads, and we are paying for the equipping of it.

Vote 605 agreed to.

On vote 606:

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, on vote 605, the dental service branch, I feel probably this is a place where I can ask the hon. Minister, I hope, this very embarrassing question. It seems that most of the dentists in the province of Ontario are in favour of fluoridation. Now in this vote of $97,800 inasmuch as the vast percentage of dentists of this province, and of every other province, are for fluoridation, I would like the hon. Minister to explain to us the policy of this government regarding the same subject.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the policy of this government was laid down very clearly and very plainly last year. The matter was put in the hands of a committee for investigation. It was agreed upon, in this House, that this was what would happen to it.

I believe the policy of the government will remain as it was enunciated last year, at least until such time as that committee reports to this House.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering if the hon. Minister, who gives very good opinions around this House, and who is one of our favourite antagonists, would care to give a personal opinion of this matter.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I may say very frankly that I have no qualms about saying that my personal opinion has not changed one bit from that enunciated last year.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, with respect to vote 606—

Mr. Chairman: Yes, vote 605 was carried. We are on vote 606.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to vote 606, I think that this raises a very serious problem, the question of the development of our nursing facilities in the province in the future.

Now, as the hon. Minister knows better than I, a substantial difference of opinion and dispute arose, during the past 4 or 5 or 6 months, with respect to the continuation of the school of practical nursing, which was initiated, I believe, 3 years ago.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister through you, firstly, what the position of the government is at the present time, with respect to these schools of practical nursing.

Secondly, what will happen to the multitude of young women who attended at these schools at great personal expense and, if the policy of the government as enunciated thus far continues, will be denied the opportunity to certificate themselves as they anticipated?

Thirdly, in the event that the government intends to discontinue these schools of practical nursing, has it in mind the substitution of any other programme that will attract and develop more people for the nursing profession in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I was of the opinion that the hon. leader of the Opposition sat in the committee last week when I—very thoroughly I thought—went into this matter of what happened to the students who—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, no, I was not there. But, in the event that it was explained at that time, I am prepared to accept a very abbreviated explanation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did give a fairly lengthy explanation, and I think we gave the members of the committee an opportunity to ask further questions about it, which many of them did.

But briefly, we have done everything possible, and we are doing everything possible, to make certain that every one of those women who enrolled in the Canadian school of practical nursing has the opportunity to complete her training, and become certificated as a certified nursing assistant.

We have organized programmes for them at whatever stage of training they had reached. I think it was something like 465 whom we cannot advise because they had not begun training; their names were not even entered on the books of the school.

Now, the school co-operated with us in every way possible. They put their books at our disposal. I believe the number was something in the neighbourhood of 465 who were designated in the books only by a number, and had not begun any training at all.

We have been unable to get in touch with them, except insofar as they might have read reports through the newspapers. The schools could not give us the names either.

Out of 1,478 applicants, 1,078 took some training; only 100 had completed the classroom course, and 58 of those tried the exams last July and most of them now are nearly at the completion of the conditions for further clinical training which we laid down.

Now, all of the remainder, whose names and addresses we knew, have been advised, by letter, what we have to offer them to enable them to become certified nursing assistants.

The second question of the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think, was in respect to what is being done.

First of all, these schools will no longer be permitted to operate under The Department of Health. We found, after serious and careful consideration, that they were not able to provide the clinical training which we believe is essential in the production of a certified nursing assistant. They were not able to give them the hospital training.

I have no fault to find with the method of classroom instruction, and I have no fault to find with the results of the written examinations because the 58 students who wrote could write, and did write, satisfactory examinations.

The schools are being allowed to continue under The Trade Schools Act, supervised by The Department of Education.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): How many of them?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, they will have to start all over again. I believe the Canadian school is going to start up again, and many others. I had two in to see me, and referred them to the department—two new applicants to operate schools—so I have nothing more to do with that, whatsoever.

Apart from doing everything possible to help these students towards their certified nursing assistant's diploma, we have plans already underway to expand the output of certified nursing assistants in the province to almost twice the number. We hope, in 1960, to graduate a total of about 1,100, as compared with less than 600 a year ago.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The department's school?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not our school alone. I believe, and I am not quite positive of this number—we have not got it here—but I believe it was 6 hospitals that started new schools on their own in 1959. They will turn out their first graduates this year. Four new hospitals are starting schools in 1960. This makes an additional 10 schools turning out assistants.

We have taken over accommodation vacated by The Department of Highways—on Davenport Road, I believe it is—that will allow us to double the size of our school here in Toronto, allow us to turn out from 100 to 125 students a year, and to conduct a very active night school as well—whereas, in Toronto, we have just been able to turn out from 35 to 50.

In London, we are using one of the old buildings on the Beck property, one which we had at first believed should be demolished. However, on looking it over we think it can be put to good use in this way for at least 5 years, with some renovation, so we are opening a school in London which should turn out 100 students a year.

We are looking, at the present time, for accommodation in Windsor, where we hope to operate a night school with accommodation for some 120 students each year.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister whether these particular potential nurses will be nurses' assistants or certified nurses' assistants only? That is, is there no hope or expectation that they will become professional nurses?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, no.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister whether the government has any programme in mind to encourage and increase the number of professional nurses in the province?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: To this, Mr. Chairman, the answer, in a word, is yes. But I have to modify that by pointing out that we have to see this in a somewhat different light.

My department controls the training of these certified nursing assistants completely. The training of registered nurses, of course, is the responsibility of the registered nurses' association of Ontario, according to The Nursing Act, 1951. But the government, I think, is stimulating interest in this field.

The Nightingale school will begin operation this fall, producing nurses in 2 years as opposed to the present 3 years, with an entirely new curriculum where the emphasis will be on education rather than on education and in-service training.

The Department of Health will help in what little way it can help. We hope to convert all our training schools to a two-year course plus a one-year internship.

There is rather a selfish motive behind this. The two years will give them the training necessary to pass their RN examination, but we will insist on a third year of internship, at a decent salary, so that we can be sure they have thorough practical training. At the same time, we will be able to use their services for a year after training them, because the nursing school costs the province a good deal of money.

We intend to pay them a reasonable salary for that year's internship and not just the honorarium that they now receive.

In this way, I believe—particularly with the two-year school with the new curriculum emphasizing education—we are going to do more to encourage and stimulate interest in nursing as a career than perhaps anything that we have done yet. I say this because many schools have already expressed a great deal of interest in this new plan, and have signified their intention of going into it as soon as they change their present set-up.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of comments and questions, with regard to this whole field of nursing and nursing assistants, that I would like to make.

In the first place, on the topic that the hon. leader of the Opposition has just raised, there is one phase of it that has always puzzled me, Mr. Chairman. I have no quarrel with the government's decision with regard to the nursing assistant schools and regularizing them under The Department of Education.

As a matter of fact, I think that what was going on before involved highly questionable procedures. Particularly do I have no quarrel when steps have been taken to make certain that those nursing assistants, who were in the process of getting their course, will have an opportunity to complete it and get the necessary credentials.

However, Mr. Chairman, the thing that puzzles me about the emergence of these private institutions is why there was any real incentive for them to emerge. I say this because we have had, for years, free courses offered by the government, and yet for some reason or another apparently there was a greater willingness or inclination on the part of people who were seeking to become nursing assistants to go and pay "x" dollars to get it from a private institution.

It strikes me that something must be wrong in the courses that were being offered by the government.

My question to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, is this:

Has the hon. Minister, since coming to this department, reviewed the courses that were being offered by the government, and has he been able to satisfy himself as to why they were not popular enough to attract the people who are interested in becoming nursing assistants, so that they went off to these private schools?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes.

This is a most interesting question, and it is a question that appealed to me as soon as I came into the department. Why did girls and women, who could ill-afford it, pay some $300 to take training which we not only gave them free—as the hon. member for York South states—but, if they attended in the day time, paid them for taking the course? We paid them a small honorarium. It is difficult to understand why.

I remember, when I did investigate it, that I found out why.

First of all, the courses were given, practically in total, by correspondence.

Now, in fairness and in justice to the schools, may I point out that they observed the letter of the law but evaded the spirit of the law. If my legal hon. friends will bear with me, I may become a little confused by getting into places where I have no business to be.

We laid down that they would take 200 hours of classroom instruction. We expected that the spirit of the law was that that 200 hours would be spread out over say 4 months at least—16 weeks, we felt, was a reasonable time.

Instead of that, they gave their classes in the main—and I say in the main because a few of them did not follow this procedure exactly—but, in the main, when a girl enrolled she was given, I think it was 34, mimeographed lessons. She went home with an understanding that, after she had turned in her comments or examinations—or tests, if you will—on her lessons, she would come in for 4 or 5 weeks and her complete 200 hours of classroom instruction would be compressed into that.

I know the hon. member must recognize that one cannot push that amount of instruction into 4 or 5 weeks. However, that was how they got around it.

Then, of course, the method of scheduling the lessons was another thing. Where we asked the student to come to the school and stay, beginning on a certain day and going straight through to a certain day to complete the course, they would put on a Saturday morning class, a half-day a week, and spread those weeks over a very lengthy period of time.

I think that, in part, accounts for the fact that 1,478 students were under instruction in the two years they were in operation. Indeed, if the other names had been found, the number would have been much greater than that.

I believe that those two things in themselves would answer the hon. member's question, because those were the only points at variance.

The contents of the course were practically the same as ours. They did make the course more interesting in that they led these students into fields which we felt did not belong in the certified nursing assistant class at all. They taught them sterile technique, and operating room procedures, and delivery room procedures—things that a certified nursing assistant, by the very nature of her training, should never be called upon to do at all. I think perhaps that that might have made the course a little more interesting.

We have tried to develop a curriculum, which will be practical and useful, without burdening the student with more than she needs, or more than she is capable of absorbing.

I think the correspondence school went beyond this, and by that method perhaps made the curriculum content in some measure a little more interesting than others.

Mr. MacDonald: I thank the hon. Minister for those comments.

Mr. Chairman, there are 3 or 4 others here. I hate to burden the hon. Minister unduly, but they are there.

The other day, Mr. Chairman, in the standing committee, we had quite a discussion of the so-called shortage of nurses. I say "so-called," because the hon. Minister told us that he did not know whether or not there was a shortage. He had investigated, and the more he investigated the more he could not come up with the answer.

This seems to me to be a bit mystifying. I must confess that it becomes even more mystifying when, since the meeting of that committee, I pick up the paper and discover that they are not able to open the new wings of the hospital in Scarborough, except for the maternity sections of the wings, because they do not have the nurses. If there is no nursing shortage, why are we not opening new buildings that have been constructed? So my mystification continues.

However, Mr. Chairman, I think there are 3 or 4 aspects of this problem of the shortage of nurses. I am confident there is a genuine shortage of nurses no matter what the hon. Minister attempts to tell us on this.

One of them is the question of what might be described, in general terms, as wages and working conditions. Normally, Mr. Chairman, wages and working conditions are met through organization. In the general field of employees this normally means a union, or some kind of professional organization which gradually acquires the powers and the status of a union, in terms of collective bargaining with the employers.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are fast approaching the position where we, as legislators, must take a look at what our responsibility is in conceding the necessary rights, not only to the overall body of the nursing association, namely the registered nurses' association of Ontario, but to any group within that association which comes to the conclusion that the registered nurses' association of Ontario may not be doing the job in terms of collective bargaining, or not doing it adequately enough, and therefore they want to avail themselves of the basic fundamental right of association to improve their position.

I was interested, for example, the other day when we were talking about this in connection with The Labour Relations Act, and pointing out that the government, in its amendments, was still going to exclude professional groups including nurses.

Over on that side of the House, and up in the back ranges of the Liberal ranks here, all hon. members profess to have received petitions from nurses in certain hospitals, saying that they did not want to have collective bargaining rights under The Labour Relations Act.

Mr. Chairman, I submit two points here. One, I know of a specific case in the city of Toronto where, in a certain hospital, a nurse—having left that hospital—was able to state and state flat blankly that most of the nurses, in subtle ways, had to sign one of these petitions. In other words, it became very much in the nature of the round-robin intervention petitions we are so familiar with in trade union circles.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Which hospital was that?

Mr. MacDonald: Never mind which hospital it was.

And the second point I wanted to make for the benefit of hon. members, who have suddenly awakened to the principles involved here, is that if there is a group of nurses—

Mr. Reaume: Which hospital?

Mr. MacDonald: Will the hon. member please be quiet?

Mr. Reaume: Which hospital is it? Give us the name.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Can you not apply the muzzle, Mr. Chairman? Thanks.

If there is a group of nurses, just as if there is a group of engineers such as Hydro engineers, who want to have collective bargaining rights even though their overall professional organization does not want them, then, Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that we, as legislators, have not got the right to deny these people the right to seek collective bargaining—if that right is a basic right.

When we lay it down in our legislation, this is not imposed, they do not have to avail themselves of it, if they are not desirous of it. But what right have we to deny anybody who wants this right of collective bargaining? I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that we have no right.

Mr. Reaume: What hospital is he talking about?

Mr. MacDonald: We will tell him afterward.

Mr. Reaume: After what?

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe, if you will apply that gavel on top of the head, it might be more effective, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Reaume: What was the name of the hospital?

Mr. MacDonald: Clearly, the gavel does not fill the gap in stopping the noise in the way you are handling it now.

Mr. Reaume: On your head.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to pursue this a bit.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is the name of the hospital?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Because I have in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a copy of the official publication of the registered nurses' association of Ontario news bulletin for the months of February-March, 1960, in which they spell out their personnel relations programme.

They point out that some time ago, in the year 1958—as a matter of fact, on a panel at their annual meeting—they discussed 3 methods of collective bargaining. The first method was that the registered nurses' association of Ontario should become certified as the collective bargaining agent for the nurses. The second one was that legislation should be provided for compulsory arbitration. The third one was a system of voluntary negotiating patterned on the method used by teachers.

Their contention was that the third one had the overwhelming endorsement, and this I can believe, because I acknowledge that, up until the present time, the majority of nurses are not going after collective bargaining rights.

Some time, I think, they are going to have to swallow their pride, and decide to eat instead of living on their pride, because there are a lot of professional groups that are just as dignified as the nursing profession—teachers and a lot of others—who have resorted to collective bargaining.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: And therefore, Mr. Chairman, will you please get—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, why do you not point out to the hon. member that he should not degrade the nurses.

Mr. Reaume: Eyes and ears of the world.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. leader of the Opposition says I should not degrade nurses. Are teachers degraded because they have been—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Are teachers degraded because they have got collective bargaining?

Mr. Reaume: The eyes and ears of the world.

Mr. MacDonald: Are engineers degraded because they seek collective bargaining rights?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Melodrama is not going to get the hon. member to first base.

Mr. MacDonald: Tut, tut.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Get on with the estimates.

Mr. MacDonald: I am on the estimates.

They spell out here what has happened since they are working on this voluntary approach, as the teachers have been working toward collective bargaining up until now.

But the significant thing, Mr. Chairman, is this—and I draw this to the attention of the hon. Minister—that they conclude their article on this in this fashion; and I quote:

Time and further experience will show whether it is wise to carry on as at present, or to seek legislation to support our determination to improve the economic standing of the nursing profession.

Now, I have had a lot of nurses come to me.

An hon. member: Why? What for?

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): That is because he looks sick.

Mr. MacDonald: I was never asked such a question as that before.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I would ask the members to let the member for York South proceed. If you have a question to ask, and if the member permits the question, he should be allowed to answer. If he does not permit a question, I suggest that you let him proceed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I would say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the query as to why they come to me, is that these nurses have come to the conclusion that they should have collective bargaining rights and they know that we, in this party, really believe in collective bargaining methods. We do not mouth them the way the Liberals and Tories do, merely for their political purposes.

However, this is the point, Mr. Chairman, I am not trying to ram down the throats of any group the fact that they must use collective bargaining rights.

Mr. Reaume: What is the hon. member trying to do?

Mr. MacDonald: All I am trying to say is this, that we, as legislators, have no right to deny collective bargaining rights to those who want them. This is the point, that to deny those who want collective bargaining rights—and if these hon. members over here, who recognize a principle one day and forget it the next day, cannot grasp that, well they will just have to work on it a bit more.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Why, the hon. member does not even recognize the basic principle, which is—that which he enunciates—

Mr. MacDonald: The basic principle, Mr. Chairman, is that anybody who wants to exercise collective bargaining rights should have them. When the day comes, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, when the day comes that the registered nurses' association of Ontario, which is, in its official publication, expressing its doubts as to the present procedures, when it comes to the government, I hope the government is not going to take a high and mighty approach and say that this is a profession, and because it is a profession, it should be denied this right, because more and more people are going to come seeking this right.

The professional engineers in the United States have collective bargaining rights under their Labour Relations Act, and they have not degraded their professional status by so doing. And Hydro engineers are seeking it today, and they will not be degrading their status by so getting it. The teachers in their own way have worked it out, and they have not degraded their status.

Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: What is your point of order?

Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this subject is either properly discussed under The Labour Relations Act discussion or it is properly discussed under this item. It seems to me it was already discussed under the other item. And the hon. member, I contend, is going far afield. He is not even discussing the employees of the health department. He is discussing all other types of employees.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, we are now discussing an estimate which deals with the nursing branch, and we are talking about the general problem of the shortage of nurses. I am submitting to hon. members that one of the reasons why we do not have enough people in the nursing profession, is that their average income is $2,100. What people are going to go into a profession with that level of income? I am exploring the possibility—for their benefit, in A B C fashion—as to how if these people want collective bargaining rights, we should be willing to grant it under The Labour Relations Act, or anywhere else, if they so desire it.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Nobody is denying that.

Mr. Grossman: Why does the hon. member not explain why?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, if this disturbs the Liberal-Tory coalition so much, I better leave it before their blood pressure rises too high.

Mr. Grossman: Why does he not explain why?

Mr. MacDonald: There is another question I want to ask the hon. Minister, and perhaps he and I can have a quiet little chat while hon. members relax.

Mr. Reaume: Go out in the hall and have it.

Mr. MacDonald: On February 9 of this year, there was a news story in the Toronto Daily Star with regard to a new hospital. Just let me read the first paragraph, as I would like to explore the government's thinking on this whole question of what is now described as "progressive patient care." The hon. members should listen, they may be learning something.

Mr. Reaume: Let him take his hand out of his pocket.

Mr. MacDonald: The Star story reads:

A hospital where they let you sleep until 7 a.m. and the nurses are never more than a whisper away from the more seriously ill, is in prospect in Metropolitan Toronto's Queensway general. If the system, styled progressive patient care, goes through, Queensway will be the first hospital in Canada to offer it.

This whole concept of progressive patient care, Mr. Chairman, is one that, in the United States, has progressed much further than here in Canada. As a matter of fact, there is some pretty copious literature available from the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare on it.

One of the things that this might do—and therefore it has relation to the nursing estimates that we are just discussing—is that it would make it possible for hospital services to be graded in accordance with the seriousness of the illness. This makes it possible for nurses and nursing services to be adapted to these needs, so that we would not have excessive nursing services, or excessive facilities in areas where there was little more than the rudimentary care required.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister what the official view is of this whole concept of progressive patient care? And related to that, is it possible to introduce this concept in existing hospitals, or is it necessary—because of changes in the physical structure of the building—that it be introduced only in the case of any new hospitals that are built?

Will it, in the hon. Minister's opinion, contribute to a more effective use of the limited nursing services that we have at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Answering the hon. member's last question first, Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting feature now being introduced into Queensway, the progressive patient care. I hope that it will be investigated still more thoroughly than it apparently has been, because it is not widely accepted yet, but that does not mean it is not a good thing.

Speaking as a physician, it would seem to me that it is a very excellent thing, at least on the surface. I have to admit very frankly that I have not studied it very deeply yet. The principle is sound—that is the segregating, or the gathering together, of all the seriously ill patients who need expert nursing care and, as they put it so very well graphically, not a whisper away from adequate and good nursing care.

And, of course, it would follow then that the patients, as they get into the “do it yourself” floor of the hospital, do not need the same number of highly skilled nurses, and can be looked after even by good ward attendants. They hardly need even a certified nursing assistant when they get to that stage.

But, looking at the principle broadly rather than superficially, I would be inclined to say that it is a very good one, a very sound one. I frankly cannot see why it cannot be introduced. More and more hospitals now are putting in a recovery department close to the operating theatre.

Of course, it should not be construed that only surgical patients are very seriously ill, because medical patients can be very, very dangerously ill and need exceptional nursing care, even more than in the most serious surgical cases.

I do not think that any insurmountable barriers will be found through introducing this kind of care into hospitals which have already been built.

This, of course, is a matter for the hospitals and I have to say again that this is a matter that comes under the hospital services commission. This is one of the reasons for the coming into being of the hospital services commission, to look after all factors in association with a well-organized integrated system of hospitals.

Now, to come to the matter of the nurses and their associations. I do not know whether or not the hon. leader of the CCF group (Mr. MacDonald) has spoken to great numbers of nurses. I have to say very honestly and very frankly that I am rather surprised that he and his hon. colleagues have not received some word from some of these nurses who are most bitterly opposed to being included in The Labour Relations Act and have sent in petitions.

I doubt if there is an hon. member outside of his own group who has not received some letters from, not one or two, but fairly large groups of nurses asking that we recognize their plea and do everything possible to see that the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) has them excluded—definitely and decidedly excluded—from the terms of The Labour Relations Act.

Now, I cannot argue with the hon. member for York South or his group, Mr. Chairman, because I can only speak of the great numbers of such appeals which have come to me directly from nurses and nursing groups, and from other hon. members asking how they should be answered.

The registered nurses' association of Ontario, when I became Minister, asked if I would change their legislation to make it compulsory for every nurse on registration to have to belong to the registered nurses' association of Ontario. I refused, Mr. Chairman, because this is completely contradictory to my philosophy. I do not believe that anyone should be forced to join a union, or forced to join a professional organization. I belong to a professional organization, but I reserve to myself the right to belong to it or not to belong to it, as I should so choose.

Mr. MacDonald: In that connection, would the hon. Minister comment about certain hospitals that force them to join by deducting the equivalent from their pay or reducing them to a lower salary?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think this is an accepted principle. There are members of trade unions from whose pay dues are deducted. They are benefiting from the work that is being done by the union. If this were done with myself, I think I would have to express strong disapproval of it, but, if this is a term of employment, there is not very much they can do about it if they want to work there. And therefore I cannot argue about it, because once again this is a local matter.

But I will not recommend to my government that the legislation be changed forcing every graduate nurse on graduation to join the association. To belong to that, to be governed by that part of the organization which must register her and look after her registration, that, of course, is compulsory, because she cannot practice her profession otherwise. But I am completely opposed to a nurse being forced to belong to the socio-economic organization phase of the organization if she chooses not to belong to it.

I do not think myself that it is degrading a professional organization if that professional organization chooses, by a majority, to come within the terms of The Labour Relations Act, or if it asks to have bargaining rights or become a union. If that is the will of the majority, once again I say I have no right to deny it, and I will not deny it, but I will have to be assured that it is the will of the majority.

At the present time I am given to understand, and I have reason to believe, that it is the will of the majority that they be excluded from the terms of The Labour Relations Act. It is passing strange to me, Mr. Chairman, that all of these letters have come, to me at least, since notice was given of the introduction of this amendment, and after publication of the article which the hon. member for York South read.

As far as the salaries of nurses are concerned, I have to admit, Mr. Chairman, that I think the hon. member for York South is a little behind the times in his salary. I know of no hospital paying registered nurses $2,100 a year.

Mr. MacDonald: The Dominion bureau of statistics' figures quote the average salary last year as the lowest in any professional status, $2,100 to $2,200.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I find it very, very difficult to believe that, because our own Ontario Hospitals are within the range, I believe, recommended by the registered nurses' association of Ontario and our starting rate is $3,240.

Mr. Whicher: That is the province of Saskatchewan. I thought it would be about $1,500.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In our hospitals the starting rate is $3,240 a year.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I just want to make this final comment. I am not going to argue the question of the collective bargaining any further at the moment, except to say that it strikes me as a little strange—and I wonder why the hon. Minister is not a bit suspicious—that such a flood of voluntary inspired letters should come from all of these individuals. I think he will find that a very serious campaign has been carried on.

However, let us leave that.

On the question, Mr. Chairman, of progressive patient care, I would hope that, if the hon. Minister's reaction to date is favourable to the whole idea, that it might be possible for his department to look into this, satisfy themselves completely as to its desirability. Having done so, perhaps they could do what has been done, for example, in the American jurisdiction—provide some literature that would be a guide to other communities who are moving towards the building of new hospitals, or renovating and changing the administration of their existing hospitals, so that they can avail themselves of whatever advantages there are in it. I suggest this because I, with the hon. Minister, agree that it makes common sense.

There is one other phase of this nursing situation that I wanted to ask the hon. Minister about, and that is the question of male nurses. I was interested in a section of a letter which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail some months ago when they were discussing the whole question of the shortage of nurses. The letter indicated that:

One of the solutions would be to institute a vigorous recruitment campaign for young men. They are greatly needed in many areas of Canada and many types of nursing work, especially today where much of what used to be junior internes' work is done by nurses.

Great Britain today has nearly 17,000 male nurses, and the United States has over 10,000, to Canada's 140.

Now, what is the view of the hon. Minister on the question of male nurses? Is the government giving any consideration, in light of this disparity in our figures as compared to those of other jurisdictions, to encouraging males to enter the nursing profession?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think my personal views are very well known, and indeed I am very unpopular with the nursing profession because of my views.

I have advocated, ever since I began to practice medicine, that there should be some encouragement given to men to enter the field of nursing. I had to say rather facetiously in committee the other day that I thought the time had come when we needed a Sylvester Pankhurst, as opposed to Sylvia Pankhurst many years ago.

I never thought that I would live to see the time when men would be fighting with women for equality, but that time has come, insofar as the nursing profession is concerned.

However, I think that a new day is dawning, the registered nurses' association of Ontario very recently appointed to their head office staff one of the best male nurses in Ontario, indeed he is a product of the Ontario Hospital system. We trained him, I think, in our hospital at Whitby. He held a very responsible position as director of the new operating room floor at the greatly expanded Oshawa general hospital and was hired from there to join the head office of the registered nurses' association of Ontario.

It is my sincere hope that men will now be encouraged to enter nursing, and I think that the hope will be realized since I know Mr. Wedgery very well, and I know what a determined man he is, and I feel that I have basis for that hope. There is a very definite and growing field for them, and I think they can fill the job very, very well.

Mr. MacDonald: Has the government done anything to encourage them specifically up to this point?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am doing everything I can with my tongue to make my views known and, of course, again this is actually the function of the hospital services commission.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that this is another point in which I agree with the hon. Minister. I am glad to find points of agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the hon. Minister this, and perhaps he will not have the figures because they may be over in The Department of Education. A year or so ago, Quebec passed what is known as Bill 29 in which they provided significant increases in financial assistance to nurses. It amounts to $300 for those in residence, $500 for non-residents, and up to $2,000 per annum for postgraduate courses.

I understand that our bursary system is available for persons going into nursing, and I was curious to know to what extent our bursary system, set up under The Department of Education, is being used by prospective nurses. Also, I would like to know whether the government feels—in light of what has been done, for example, in the neighbouring province—that more assistance in this way might not attract more people into the nursing profession, by removing the financial barriers to getting into it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer, Mr. Chairman, of course, is that I really do not know.

Hospital trained nurses I know are not eligible for bursaries. I believe that university trained—that is the product of university schools of nursing—are eligible for postgraduate bursaries, as are also registered nurses, and when the hospital trained nurse graduates, she is eligible for bursary support for postgraduate work.

Quebec's Bill 29, of course, was a few years behind the times, again behind Ontario. This fine government over here did give leadership. I believe it was 4 years ago, Mr. Chairman, that this government started paying $300 for every nurse in training and now, with the hospital plan, the whole thing is part of the per diem cost of hospitals.

Mr. Thomas: It is now borne by the premium holders of the commission.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: One-third. One-third by the province, one-third by the Dominion.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman is the money paid to the individual nurse or to the hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is included in the hospital rate.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The trainee gets no particular benefit. Now, the Quebec legislation actually benefits the particular and individual nurse.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: By way of a bursary?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well no, we have not got that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Not exactly.

Mr. C. S. MacNaughton (Huron): To progress this matter of average salaries a little further, particularly because I am the trustee of a hospital, I would be interested in having the hon. member for York South substantiate this average pay figure that he has projected here. He suggests an average wage of $2,100 which, to me, would presume that there were wage levels above this and wage levels below it.

Mr. Chairman, I would be happy if he would disclose the exact source of this information. I would furthermore say to him that he might name the hospitals who are paying these rates of wages, because the hospital of which I am trustee would be very, very happy to pay substantially more than this.

We are paying substantially more than these salary rates and, in addition to a higher rate, Mr. Chairman, we are also supplying room and board at a nominal rate. I think this can be said to be characteristic of hospitals all throughout the area.

I think the hon. member for York South would render a great service incidentally, Mr. Chairman, to many hospitals throughout the province if he would disclose to these hospitals where nurses are available at these rates of wages that he has discussed.

Now, before I sit down, I would like to make one observation, and that is with respect to the matter he proposed concerning

The Labour Relations Act. I suggest to him, Mr. Chairman, that the most valid reason why these nurses should be excluded from the provisions of The Labour Relations Act is simply the fact that an overwhelming number of them have requested that they be excluded. I can think of no better reason for it than just the reason I have expressed.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to comment on that last observation. I will comment on both of them. On this question of the overwhelming majority, that is fine. I am not attempting to push anything down their throats.

But the hon. Minister evaded the question when he said, "As long as a majority do not want it, I am not going to give it to them." What is the hon. Minister going to do when the vote becomes 55-45? Is he then, because 55 per cent. are opposed, going to deny the 45 per cent. their right?

That is precisely the problem we are already faced with in the case of the Hydro engineers.

They are a minority within the overall professional engineers but they believe they should have the right to collective bargaining—in the fashion that it has already been conceded in other jurisdictions.

So, if it is a basic right—this is the point and I put it to the hon. member seriously because he, I think, is interested—if it is a basic right, I submit to him that no majority has the right to deny a minority a basic right.

Mr. Rowntree: Now he is rephrasing it.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not rephrasing it.

Mr. Rowntree: In his own union organizations the minority has to abide by the will of the majority.

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Chairman, we have threshed this through long enough.

I just want to explain to the hon. member, when he queried where I got this figure, that this is a Dominion bureau of statistics' figure that is now about a year old—given in a Canadian Press dispatch. The average figures were released by the Dominion bureau of statistics for the various professions, and they range from these very lucrative professions like lawyers and doctors up about $14,000 or $15,000 down to, they said, $2,100 and some for nurses.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that averages sometimes can be meaningless, but this is an official Dominion bureau of statistics' figure. I am convinced that, if we look it up in the Dominion bureau of statistics, we will find that I am quoting it accurately.

Mr. Grossman: Is that for all of Canada?

Mr. MacDonald: I presume so, yes.

Mr. MacNaughton: May I ask a question of the hon. member then? Do I understand him correctly when he says these figures are Dominion bureau of statistics' figure for 1959?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, 1958 or 1959.

Mr. MacNaughton: Well, are they for 1958 or 1959? It makes a difference, Mr. Chairman, because, within my experience, it is not possible to engage nurses in the nursing profession on the scale of wages that he calls an average, Dominion bureau of statistics or otherwise. Now it is 1959, 1958, maybe it is 1955, if he looks back.

Mr. G. Laverne (Russell): Mr. Chairman, just in answer to my hon. friend from York South, I would like to say that he made reference—now I say this in all sincerity—to a flood of letters that the hon. Minister mentioned, asking the government not to impose this—and when the word is imposed—I would suggest that they are the right words, Mr. Chairman, because I just wish to say this. These are letters that I received from the registered nurses' association of Ontario, and they are not in 1958 nor 1959 but they are in February of 1960. I would like to draw attention to this—and these are names I did not ask for, I can assure hon. members—but these are the words that I would like to read into the record:

Now, we wish to be protected from compulsory union membership.

There, Mr. Chairman, in essence, is the crux of the matter. They asked to be protected. As you know, I am very impartial at all times, but I do say that this government always protects the rights of the people in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on item No. 4 on vote 606, the increase in costs in training nurses' assistants here does not indicate a vastly expanded programme. Would the hon. Minister care to expand on that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It must be understood that we have already our organized staff and teachers and instructors and it is not necessary to add a complete complement of those.

A great deal of the expansion—I want to make clear again, if my former statements were not eminently clear—is coming from hospital training schools. The expansion which we ourselves are undertaking can be adequately covered by this.

May I, Mr. Chairman, go back to this Bill 29 of Quebec's and point something out to the hon. members? I just got a statement here which covers 48 of the 63 training schools in Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1959. These schools are paying out of an approved hospital cost. In the first year they are paying from $60 a year to $720 for the nurses in training; in the second year from $60 to $780; the third year from $72 to $1,800 for the nurses.

So I do not think that Ontario yet needs to hang its head insofar as Quebec, Saskatchewan or any other province in the Dominion of Canada is concerned.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, on vote 606:

In the city of Oshawa we have the Oshawa missionary college, the college of the Seventh Day Adventists. They are very fine people, and are trying to make some contribution to the present nursing shortage. In January they established a school of nursing there. I presume they have a licence from the department to operate, but I was wondering if they receive any financial assistance from The Department of Health. The hon. Minister is quite aware of the Seventh Day Adventists' school of nursing which was established in January.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot say that for sure without consulting the hospital services commission because this is a little different. They are getting their theoretic training at the college, and then the girls are going to Branson hospital in North York for their practical training. I do not know just what the relationship is, as far as grant assistance is concerned yet, but we will get that when we deal with the commission estimates.

Vote 606 agreed to.

Vote 607 agreed to.

On vote 608:

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, on vote 608, there is 33⅓ per cent. of a reduction in the maintenance in item No. 3. Does that mean that the incidence of venereal disease is down?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes.

Mr. Troy: Thank you.

Vote 608 agreed to.

On vote 609:

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister for this information.

I noticed that in the speech of the hon. Provincial Treasurer that the hon. Minister was thinking of the Beck memorial sanatorium at London in relation to turning this over for the examination of retarded and emotionally disturbed children.

I want to say that we have such an association in the city of Windsor, and they certainly back this movement to quite an extent. We want to assure the hon. Minister that, once this is accomplished, the people of Windsor will be quite pleased.

I would like to know if the hon. Minister has any date, in view of when that will happen, and when the hospital will be open for that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the answer is the hospital was opened on February 1, 1960. It is now operating.

Mr. Trotter: I just want to inquire where the hon. Minister allows, in his estimates, for the bringing in of the refugees that have tuberculosis.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, we do not bring them in. The travelling costs, if that is what the hon. member means, are met by the federal government.

The cost to us is when the patient gets to hospital, and it is not itemized separately or specifically. They just go into the hospital as ordinary patients, as covered by vote 609. There is no special amount set aside particularly for the treatment of the tubercular refugee.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, with respect to TB patients, does the hon. Minister have any estimates on how many TB refugees he will be taking during the year? Has he, as yet, arrived at any agreement with the federal government with respect to voluntary organizations and the sponsorship?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Chairman, there has been no such agreement reached between the federal government and volunteer organizations. But the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) has already enunciated, and has repeated on several occasions, that the province of Ontario is prepared to take its full share of all those permitted to enter Canada by the federal Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, what is the reason for the wide discrepancy in the amounts allocated for these clinics in Sudbury and Kirkland Lake as compared to the others.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer, I am assured, is that in Kirkland Lake we occupy space which has been granted us through the generosity of the board of health of Kirkland Lake. The medical officer of health does the work for us on a small honorarium.

In Sudbury we rent space which is much less costly than it is in other places. The two operations are just more economical than in other places.

I am also advised that our own North Bay laboratory does the work in Sudbury.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, on vote 609, I would like to refer to the tubercular sanatoria in the province, and particularly the private sanatoria. I want to compliment them on the good job they have done in the past. But I would like to ask the hon. Minister how many private sanatoria are still operating in the province.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, this question eludes me. I think I must be getting rather stupid—more than usual. Would the hon. member explain what he means by private sanatoria?

Mr. Innes: Sanatoria where the hon. Minister gives a grant per diem per bed, either empty or in use.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We do that in all of the sanatoria. It should be clearly understood that none of the sanatoria belongs to the province of Ontario. They are private in that they are operated by voluntary organizations. We do not own them by any means. I believe they all operate under public charter. We pay for the care of patients in all of them.

Mr. Innes: Could the hon. Minister tell me how many empty beds there are in Beck sanatorium at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I think I can. There are 30 vacant beds in Beck. Remember, Mr. Chairman, that we are now occupying three-and-a-half buildings of Beck sanatorium.

Mr. Innes: Yes, I understand that.

What out-patient care is given to patients who have been confined to sanatoria, and who do subsequently get out of the sanatorium? What out-patient care do we continue to give to them?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe it is laid down on an individual basis. Each patient on discharge is given complete and total instruction. The family physician and the medical officer of health for the municipality, to which the patient returns, is given a copy of those instructions. So each patient is treated on an individual basis.

Mr. Innes: I have a letter here of March 5, which was directed to Mr. Shorey. I am not going to read the whole letter to hon. members, but I do want to refer them to the last part of it.

This will bring to their attention, the degree of the case.

This man, who had gone to Beck in May or April, had gone through the different tests. In September, he became negative and has been negative ever since.

In December, he decided that he would like to go back home and, of course, there was a little bit of a stir about it. Finally he did leave, and he has continued to progress, and his condition has continued to improve ever since.

But I am going to read the last paragraph of this letter that he wrote to me, and I will bring this to the hon. Minister personally at some later date.

This is an account that was sent to him by the hospital at London, and it amounted to $62. But he points out that, had he remained in the hospital, it would have cost the government over $1,200.

Now, he is a veteran of both wars, and he feels that he has not been justly treated in the way this has been handled. I am going to read the last paragraph of his letter if I may be allowed:

This account is still refused. Please advise me of your authority for so doing, because your handling of my case could raise the presumption that possibly there are two policies in fact, one for TB refugees which includes treatment, food, housing and a job—and one, of course, headlined—and another for Canadians such as myself, and possibly others, who would also prefer out-patient treatment, but because of the pressure put upon them dare not leave the sanatorium.

Now, I am going to see the hon. Minister personally on this. But I do feel that this gentleman has a legitimate case when he claims that he has saved the government approximately $1,200 or $1,300, and he has submitted a bill for $62 and the department in Toronto here have refused to pay it, and said that he must get it through the municipality, through welfare.

Now, this gentleman can certainly pay for it, although he is a pensioner. But he does feel that this government should pay that bill and not have him resort to welfare of his municipality.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Is this bill for post-sanatorium care or in-sanatorium care?

Mr. Innes: Post-sanatorium care.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, my department is not responsible for any post-sanatorium care costs. They are the responsibility of welfare.

Mr. Innes: Now, just a moment, in The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act, 1958, chapter 346, under the heading item No. 47, it says:

The Minister may provide and pay an amount not exceeding $18 per week for the treatment outside of sanatoria of a former patient who has recovered to such an extent that, in the opinion of the director or an inspector, he is said to be discharged and is not a resident.

Now, I think this gentleman has a legitimate case.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This, Mr. Chairman, I understand, was deleted from our regulations two years ago and transferred to The Department of Public Welfare. Is the hon. member's copy of the regulations up to date?

Mr. Innes: 1958.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I want to make it quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that there could be great variances of opinion about whether or not the patient could be treated as an out-patient.

It has not yet been accepted that tuberculosis can be treated as an out-patient disease. I would myself accept the dictum of the chest tuberculosis specialists, I would not even presume to advise a patient, myself, without the advice of a specialist in tuberculosis as to whether or not he was prepared to have treatment on an out-patient basis.

However, I agree the man feels aggrieved, and I would be very, very happy indeed to look into it, and we shall do all we can to see that it is cleared up to everyone's satisfaction.

Mr. Innes: I would like to thank the hon. Minister, and I can assure him that this man is really upset. He tells me he has other cases; he is willing to put his name before the committee on health and he will testify before it if the hon. Minister so desires.

He does feel that the taxpayers of this province are certainly being hamstrung by a lot of extra people who are in the sanatoria who have no need to be there, and he will use himself as a perfect example. He has also intimated to me that there are people who are patients at the hospital who are going out doing other work, and he has also gone so far as to tell me that there are patients who have taken holidays and have come back in a period of a month or so, and are still residents of the hospital.

The unfortunate part of it is that this government is paying a grant per bed whether they are there or whether they are not. I think this certainly does need a little scrutiny on the part of the department to see if we are paying for something that we should not be paying for.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that we are not paying for anything we do not know about. This business of going out to work is part of a planned programme. This is part of our programme of rehabilitation, and I support it wholeheartedly, and the business of going home for vacations is also part of a planned programme. We want to see how the patient will bear up, how he will adjust to normal living again, if his condition will stay quiet.

This is all part of a planned programme, and I can assure the hon. member that we are constantly after the superintendent and staff of the sanatoria to get the patients out just as quickly as possible. Indeed, we are chasing one or two of them at the present time because we find that the per patient day's stay is above the provincial average, and we have to have some yardstick by which we can measure these things. We have a provincial average, and if that sanatorium gets out of line with this pattern, believe me we jump on them promptly and heavily.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question with respect to the estimates under the heading of clinics to be established. I note, in the estimates for 1959-1960, that a total sum of $64,000 was set out, whereas this time $23,000 is set out. I should like to know what clinics were established in the year 1959, and the reason why this is considerably lower at this time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We opened a clinic early in the year last year. We planned to open one this year, but we do not foresee that it will be opened until well on in the year. Therefore, we do not expect to use as much money as we would have had it been open for a whole year.

Vote 609 agreed to.

On vote 610:

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, on vote 610, I would ask the hon. Minister what action The Department of Health took in relation to the request of a sub-committee of the Ontario federation of labour regarding industrial hygiene submitted in October, 1958.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid I am not familiar with that recommendation. I was not the Minister in October, 1958, and I am afraid I would have to be apprised of what the hon. member refers to.

Mr. Gisborn: I will read it to the hon. Minister.

The committee recommends that the Ontario federation of labour request the industrial hygiene division of The Department of Health to conduct studies in the field of air pollution, use of polluted water in industry, the transmission of diseases in hospitals and among groups working together in close quarters, the effect of radiation, and such other problems as may require public attention; and to further request that all findings and recommendations arising out of these studies should be given the widest possible public circulation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would like to advise the hon. member that those studies are underway, that we are working in close co-operation with the officials of The Department of Labour in carrying out those studies. I believe the water studies have been undertaken by the water resources commission.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): On vote 610, is the air pollution control in there? Or is it in vote 611?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does come in vote 610.

Mr. Cowling: Well, I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us what the budget is, what part of that is for the air pollution division. Perhaps, for the benefit of some of the newer hon. members, the hon. Minister might just tell them what is being done in that division.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We are undertaking studies at the present time, and having discussions with interested groups, with a view to expanding our activities in the matter of air pollution on a regional or area basis.

As the hon. members know, it was two years ago The Air Pollution Control Act—that was the name of it, I think—was passed, bringing this matter under the supervision of The Department of Health. Legislation was passed enabling municipalities to pass by-laws to control, to get into, this air pollution field.

We did meet with some difficulty, to begin with, in getting a proper or adequate bylaw drawn up. However, that has been done, and, during the past few months, we have approved, I think, 14 or 16 such bylaws submitted by certain municipalities for our approval.

However, some industrial areas are still concerned that this does not completely answer the problem, and have asked us to extend the pollution control even more widely than we have now permitted. To that end, we have already met with interested groups—labour, industry, chambers of commerce, and municipal councils—with a view to seeing what steps we can take to control this, or try to control this, on an area or regional basis, rather than leaving it to a single municipality. Leaving it to a single municipality creates the possibility that one municipality very interested in this may pass the necessary bylaws, but be surrounded by other municipalities who ignore it.

Now, there is permissive legislation which will allow groups of municipalities to join in this on their own. But we believe that it could be set up maybe something after the fashion of the conservation areas, where large regions are taken under the control of the various municipalities within the region. That might be an answer to it, or it may call for some other type of management.

However, we are looking at that now, as requested by the various interested groups in the province.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister if research is being done in such areas as in the uranium mines of Elliot Lake and Bancroft, in regard to the possibility of radiation?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that every employee is subjected to periodic tests. This is not my concern, unfortunately—I should not say unfortunately, because it is being very adequately done by The Department of Labour. But there is very strict control of this, because it is a very dangerous matter. I repeat that very strict control is being exercised over this.

Then we ourselves are encouraging studies into the radiation content of various substances. Indeed, the University of Toronto, I believe, has a project under way at the present time, where the whole bodies of human beings are being checked for radiation content.

Mr. Troy: And equipment, too, I suppose, is checked so that the best type of safety equipment is used—that is under The Department of Labour, too. That is not the hon. Minister's department.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right—there is very close co-operation between the departments.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): On vote 610, does this mobile unit, that goes around to industrial plants taking X-rays, come under this department?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Vote 610. That is the silicosis unit. Yes.

Mr. Gordon: Well now, there seems to be a conflict of opinion between the doctors in the department who only see the X-ray and they do not know the patient at all, they just see the X-ray.

Now, I have two cases here, and they are both new Canadians, and they have been denied a certificate of health because of the X-ray plate that was received in the department here.

Yet in the city of Brantford, where these men are, a specialist in two cases, gives them a clear bill of health.

On another case, I had the man go to the clinic in Brantford, and this clinic gives this man a clear bill of health. In the last paragraph here, after a very lengthy examination, it says: "In my opinion, he should be allowed to take any employment which he desires."

Now, on the other case, the other man that is concerned, the doctor told me, just on Saturday, that this man has a very slight shadow on his lung. The man tells me that he had a very serious illness as a boy with pneumonia, and it left that shadow which has been there ever since. And the specialist in Brantford examined the man, 3 years ago, and examined him again now, and finds it still the same.

Now, the doctors in Brantford say that these men should be given certificates of health, showing that they can carry on their employment. These two men are the ones who are in the middle, and they cannot work because they cannot get certificates, and they cannot get any other employment because of their age. They are in their late forties and they cannot get any other employment, but they are gainfully employed in these two industries—they are only small industries—and I spoke with the heads of both industries. These men are very necessary to them, they would like to have them, but because they cannot get this certificate from the department, they are denied work.

Now then, here is the conflict of two opinions, the doctors here in the department who have never seen the men, who just see the plate, and the doctors in Brantford examined the men personally, and two doctors in each case give them a clean bill of health.

Now, someone—there must be someone that is right—but my point is that these men are suffering because they cannot work because they cannot get a certificate to work. They are denied employment just because they cannot get the certificate from here.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the lack of a certificate, or the possession of the certificate, only allows them to go into industry or bars them from industry where there is a silicosis hazard.

Mr. Gordon: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does not refuse them the right to work.

Mr. Gordon: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is rather a broad term. Now, who is right, Mr. Chairman? This is a question which we in medicine often pose. It is rather fortunate that my hon. friend is engaged in an industry where there is not too much variation of opinion. A can of peas is a can of peas.

However, one doctor's opinion of a patient can be one thing and he can justify it, and another doctor—or another dozen doctors—may provide one or a dozen different opinions, that each one in turn can justify. The hon. member says that the clinic and the specialists in Brantford saw the patient; that our physician judged him by the X-ray. Well, the story of silicosis, as I was taught it, is judged by the X-ray.

With all due respect to my specialist friends in internal medicine, the diagnosis of silicosis is a very tricky problem. We have one man in the department to whom we entrust this matter. I think he has spent the whole of his professional life in it, and he is considered, in Canada, to be one of the outstanding authorities on it. That is the only justification I can offer the hon. member for our departmental opinion. However, I think that, since there appears to be a goodly weight of medical evidence opposed to his opinion, what we will arrange to do is suggest that all of them get together in consultation over these cases and ascertain if there is a compromise to be found, or to establish if an injustice has been done. At least there will be an exchange of professional opinion so that some satisfactory conclusion can be worked out.

It is not the intention of the department to work a hardship upon anyone. It is rather a great responsibility, however, to give a man a clean bill of health if the examining physician has reason to suspect silicosis.

If he engages in an industry where there is a silica hazard and he breaks down, it is completely impossible for him to get workmen's compensation, and the man is left in a far worse state than he should be.

It would seem to me that if there is a suspicion of silicosis, it would be better that that man be directed into some other type of industry where there is no silica hazard. There is one further point, and I was rather interested in this, that one of the patients concerned was described as a new Canadian. I—

Mr. Gordon: Both of them.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Both of them are new Canadians. This could cast a little different light on it, because in Europe there is not nearly the emphasis put on silicosis as there is here. We consider it a very serious disease, a serious condition, a very disabling one. The European people do not agree with us.

But I can assure my hon. friend that, if he will give me the names of these people privately, I will have my staff contact the other physicians, and see if there is a way of resolving this problem, because we do not want to work a hardship.

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. Minister, this one man has been examined in 1956. Now, in 1959 he was again X-rayed at the Brant sanatorium, and at this time no evidence of silicosis was found.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there is any danger at all as a result of accidents in atomic reactor plants. My purpose in asking this question is that, just about 20 miles outside of the city of Windsor, across the border, an atomic reactor plant is being built in Monroe, Michigan.

Now, the winds, being prevailing westerlies, would naturally carry all of that radiation toward Essex county and the city of Windsor. Does this government, or does this department, have any control over that? First, is there any danger at all to the municipality; and second, does this department have any control over that, seeing that it is not a Canadian plant?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In the matter of accidents, the statistics would have to be secured through the workman's compensation board. To the best of my knowledge, there has been none reported yet in Ontario.

My hon. colleague, the Minister of Labour, assures me that his people have discussed this with the scientists and they do not believe there is, or that there would be, a danger in case of an accident at the Monroe, Michigan, plant.

However, we have a reciprocal arrangement with the state of Michigan, and they, at the present time, are constantly testing. They are doing area testing, background testing. When our laboratory is in operation, we, too, will join with them and keep a constant flow of information passing between the two jurisdictions.

Mr. Newman: Thank you, sir.

Vote 610 agreed to.

On vote 611:

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I must say quite frankly I am very disappointed with the hon. Minister regarding his reference to the important problem of air pollution. I do not think he is doing very much about it. The only thing he said was that there are, at the present time, 24 bylaws in the course of preparation.

I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister that it is all very well for the municipality to pass bylaws, but it is another thing to enforce them. Where the problem in some of the small municipalities is so great, particularly in respect to air pollution, I think that this government, as we discussed at the select committee on air pollution, has to give consideration to giving some form of grant, on a percentage basis, to implementing the salary of an air pollution officer. If we are to get anywhere at all, that is the only way, I think, by which we are going to make progress in this important problem of air pollution. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what he thinks about that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of the questions under discussion at the present time.

Vote 611 agreed to.

Vote 612 agreed to.

On vote 613:

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I questioned the hon. Minister as to this government's appropriation covering the treatment, control and prevention of drug addiction in this province. And the hon. Minister said that I would find that under the heading of mental health. I see that appropriation amounts to some $46 million.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I find myself in the position where I should like to press the hon. Minister to be a little more precise, a little more exact in his answer.

I now ask him where, and at what hospitals, has treatment been given to drug addicts? Would he point out the hospitals to me? Is it Aurora, Brockville, or Cobourg?

Furthermore can he tell me, in dollars and cents, just how much was spent last year, and how much he intends to spend next year, in the treatment of drug addicts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, drug addicts and alcoholics can be, and are when it is desired, admitted to any one of 10 Ontario Hospitals for the mentally ill.

To give the hon. member the precise information he asked for, Mr. Chairman, is quite impossible I am afraid. I suppose we can get it for him, but we would have to go through the whole records of the hospitals, find out how many drug addicts, how many alcoholics were treated at each one, how much care each one got, and what the total cost of that care was. Therefore I am afraid that I cannot give the specific or exact answer that the hon. member requested.

Mr. Gould: Well now then, Mr. Chairman, may I proceed further?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Gould: The hon. Minister states in his summary of appropriations, vote 608, for venereal disease control branch, $45,500; for tuberculosis prevention branch $7,013,600.

Now, where in these estimates has he a like specific appropriation for the treatment of drug addicts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The drug addicts, again I repeat, Mr. Chairman, who come to us for treatment, do so because of some emotional disturbance, some mental illness, or some mental breakdown. That is the only way we get drug addicts or alcoholics. We do not treat drug addicts per se.

I tried to point out, in as clear and precise language as is possible for me to do this afternoon, that, unfortunately, in our society, we have no way of picking those who are believed to be, or are known to be, drug addicts out of the population and forcing them to take treatment. If they come to us, and seek voluntary admission to hospital for the treatment of drug addiction, or if they come to us stating that they believe themselves to be drug addicts, so long as the voluntary application is signed by a physician, we will admit them to one of our mental hospitals. Then, on the basis of our observation, we will decide whether they are drug addicts, and, if they are, we will do everything we can to treat them.

Mr. Gould: Well then, is the hon. Minister not able to tell me, through you, Mr. Chairman, approximately how much his department spent last year in treating drug addicts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, it would be a figure picked out of the ether. It would be ridiculous and foolish in the extreme to give it to the hon. member, because it may not have any basis in fact.

I will try to get the figure for the hon. member, but I must admit that it will take me some time, because I will have to ask the hospitals to go through all of their records. But I have no objection to doing that, if it is possible to get it at all.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, in the Throne speech, there is this phrase that I referred to this afternoon, when the hon. Minister told me to wait until this vote came up. It says this:

Funds will be requested for experimental projects involving group therapy for first-offender drug addicts.

Could the hon. Minister point out where these funds are located in this vote?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This would be in The Department of Reform Institutions' estimates vote. Unfortunately we have nothing to do with offenders, those who offend under the law.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, when the estimates for The Department of Reform Institutions were here, I tried to get the same information I am trying to get now. And it is the same information that my hon. colleague has just been trying to get.

How many dollars are being spent for treatment of alcoholics, how many dollars are being spent for treatment of drug addicts, how many beds are being set aside? Apparently, neither the hon. Minister, whose estimates are presently before us, nor his hon. colleague, the Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope), whose estimates were before us this afternoon, can give us those figures, or wants to give us those figures.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Now, Mr. Chairman, I have absolutely no objection to answering the question insofar as it relates to my department.

No beds are set aside, particularly or specifically, for the treatment of addiction, either drug addiction or alcoholism. If a drug addict seeks to be admitted voluntarily, or if a drug addict is committed to our care—either on the certificate of two physicians or by the courts—if a bed is available or as soon as a bed is available, he will be put in that bed.

Now, we will use all the beds that we have as they are needed, and, to the best of my knowledge, I do not think that we have turned any drug addict away.

Now, I know that the daily press said we turned two away, but one was not turned away, as the newspaper reporter was given to believe. She was not turned away.

Indeed, I called the controller in question and said to her very frankly that, "If you get that patient down to the hospital, she will be admitted immediately." But the patient is still not in the hospital because she has never appeared, despite the very zealous effort of the controller to get her there.

The other patient, who was supposedly refused admission, was brought to our hospital at New Toronto, on Queen Street, one Sunday afternoon—the date I think was either in December or January—and the mother's story was that her son was refused admission. He was refused admission on that occasion because we did not have a vacant bed.

But when I looked further into the story, I found that this young man was first brought to the attention of our hospital on October 23 last year, when he was to be released from one of the reform institutions. It was believed that he was under treatment for drug addiction, and it was believed that he had progressed enough that, if his treatment could be carried on, he would get along very well.

Arrangement was made by the reform institution in question that he would be admitted to our hospital on October 23. A bed was there for him, it was kept for him, but he did not report until sometime in December or January—I forget the date—but there was no longer a bed. But had he come back again, or had he taken the bed when it was available—we were not able to get in touch with him then—he would have been admitted to hospital.

To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, we have not yet turned away any drug addict or alcoholic who came to us for treatment.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, in my speech on the Throne debate, I suggested that there was only identifiable in the public accounts, the sum of $360,000—which was a fraction of 1 per cent. of the total money received from liquor revenues—specifically devoted to the treatment of alcoholics.

I used the word identifiable deliberately and purposely, because I noticed the same expression on the hon. Prime Minister's face and on the hon. Minister of Health's face at that time.

And, having noticed those expressions, I expressed the hope at that time, and twice since then, that when we came to these estimates the hon. Minister of Health would be able to identify the specific amounts that he spends for the care and treatment of alcoholics.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): That is silly.

Mr. Singer: Now, I tried to get it from the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions and he could not give it to me. I am trying to get it tonight from the hon. Minister of Health and he apparently is not able to give it to us.

In the Throne speech, it says this:

Further steps will be taken to widen treatment for alcoholism, a subject in which Ontario is well in the lead.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that this House is more than interested in finding out what these further steps are, and what sums of money are being devoted to these very important problems.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to my hon. friend that he should not ask silly questions. He ought to know better.

Mr. Singer: All I want to get is an answer.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, then let me take The Department of Reform Institutions. He had the opportunity of asking that.

Now, what happens in Reform Institutions is this. Alcoholics and drug addicts are treated at one of our institutions—I think it is the Mimico institution—although it is not set aside particularly for this. Now, it is impossible to segregate—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Frost: If my hon. friend would listen to this, he might learn something.

Mr. Singer: Do not lose your temper.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think there is any use in going ahead. I will not bother him in that respect.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I point out that it would be humanly impossible for us to earmark funds for each specific disease.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why, of course it is silly.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not know how many types and strains of mental illness we have, but the hon. members do not see, in my estimates, so many dollars set aside for the treatment of schizophrenics or manic-depressives, or compulsive states or psychoneurotics or anxiety. All of these are symptoms of complexes, just as drug addiction and alcoholism are, and it would be absolutely ridiculous and extreme to earmark "x" dollars for the treatment of the drug addict or the treatment of the alcoholic.

We will treat every drug addict and every alcoholic who is admitted to our hospitals. But we do not know how many dollars it is going to cost us, because we do not have any idea of how many there are. When we can find out, when society can help to show us a way to bring the addict out of society for treatment in the early stages of this problem, then we will be able to earmark "x" dollars, and will be able to tell the hon. member how much we are spending and how we propose to spend it.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, if what the hon. Minister of Health says is correct, why are there these two sentences in the Throne speech?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, because sensible people would understand what it means. People who do not want to be sensible—

Mr. Singer: Let me get my two cents in. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor now, and I want to make this point, because I think it is important. The Throne speech says:

Further steps will be taken to widen treatment for alcoholism,
What are the further steps?

I have been asking this question repeatedly, and I do not get an answer.

The second statement is this, Mr. Chairman, and I am reading again from the Throne speech.

Funds will be requested for experimental projects involving group therapy for first-offender drug addicts.

Where are the further funds, and what funds are being requested?

Now surely, we should get an answer to that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that is one of the wider steps that is being taken, although it is not in my department.

This programme is under The Provincial Secretary's Department, and a new hospital, I believe, is going to be built. Surely that is widening out the undertaking; that is going to be a much greater undertaking than we have ever had in the past. That is one of them that I know.

My budget for the department in the mental health branch is up quite a number of dollars, who knows but that some of that will be used for the treatment of alcoholics? Who knows how many alcoholic people are going to be admitted at any time?

Mr. Singer? Who knows? That is what the people of Ontario want to find out.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: At this time next year, I will tell the hon. member how many more alcoholics I admitted, how many more drug addicts I admitted, and how many more I treated.

Mr. Singer: Oh, no, nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I cannot tell, until the year's operations are over, how much will be spent on them.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some general comments with regard to vote 613, covering the appropriation for the mental health branch of the department and proposing a sum of $46 million. This sum is, I believe, half of the total proposed appropriations of the department. I therefore feel it is worthy of considerable comment.

I notice that the appropriation for this year is increased over last year by somewhat more than $6 million. It would appear on the face of it that most of the increase—although it is not easy to figure it out right to the last dollar, or even to thousands of dollars—is for normal increases in salaries, plus some money appropriated for some new institutions which are in the process of being opened up.

I am certainly not criticizing increased appropriations for this branch.

I fear though, Mr. Chairman, that there is an indication in the estimates that The Department of Health, in dealing with the problem of mental health, is suffering from the same institutionitis, if I may call it that, as The Department of Reform Institutions seems to be suffering from. Certainly we need new and improved institutions in this province. But I seem to detect—and the hon. Minister will correct me if I am wrong—that an undue emphasis is on institutions, and that there is quite inadequate emphasis on other phases of mental health programmes.

I am certainly not suggesting that there is no money being spent on community services, or that there is no money being spent on research. I notice, for example, that $300,000 of the $46 million appropriated is for the psychiatric research institute for children in London, which I believe is a new institute just coming into being. In my opinion it is no doubt a very worthwhile project.

There are undoubtedly some other items in the estimates for community services and research services. Of the research projects the hon. Minister read out this afternoon—of these specific projects that are being undertaken in the province—I think most were in the mental health field. At least that was my impression as he read the list rather rapidly. All that is good.

But, I still submit that, in a problem of this kind, there should be more attention paid to prevention, which, of course, involves research, of getting greater knowledge about the nature of some of these diseases.

In the general type of mental hospital, it is possible—at least I judge it is possible from what I have read—that some of the new drugs that have been developed may result, in time, in a major breakthrough so that, perhaps over a period of time, we will find ourselves in the same position as with tuberculosis, where there is a decline in the need for hospitals.

I do not know, I get that impression from some literature I have read. I hope that it is true. Undoubtedly, these new techniques are being used in Ontario Hospitals, although they were not developed here.

I still believe however, that it is an area where still further and greatly expanded research would be desirable. It certainly would be desirable if we could keep people out of mental hospitals, and when they are there, when they have to go there, that we get them out as soon as possible. But I will not deal with the general problem.

I would like, instead, to give some attention to the problem of the mentally retarded persons. I think this may be the really serious field, as far as future service in the province is concerned.

We now have the Orillia Hospital and the hospital at Smiths Falls in operation. The Orillia Hospital is a very ancient and dilapidated old building, which certainly should be replaced entirely.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Only part of it.

Mr. Bryden: But there is the newer hospital in Smiths Falls, and there are two or three others coming into operation in the near future, which is good. But I am wondering just how we ever expect to solve this problem of dealing with mentally retarded people through building more institutions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Well, frankly, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a subject for cheap witticisms. It is a very serious problem, and worth dealing with in a serious way.

I am informed by people who are experts in this field, which I am certainly not, that at least two per cent. of the people born are mentally retarded to the degree where they will very likely need institutional care, at some time or other, during their lives. That is a figure I have been given by experts. I certainly do not pretend any expert knowledge myself.

But, if that figure is even approximately correct, I would suggest that it indicates the need for some real change in direction of our methods of handling this problem.

If two per cent. of the people born are mentally retarded to a considerable degree, or from a considerable degree to a very great degree, then that means that, every year in this province, there are about 3,000 or more children being born who are mentally retarded to the point where they will probably require institutional care under our present knowledge.

This means that if we built two large-sized institutions every year, we would just barely keep up with the problem, without making any inroads into the backlog of cases which we all know have accumulated. There is such a large backlog that they do not even bother recognizing its existence any more. So it seems to me that this is a field where—

Mr. Lavergne: Where does my hon. friend get his information?

Mr. Bryden: I am dealing with some serious problems.

If the hon. Minister of Health disputes my figure of two per cent., I would be very happy to hear his opinion, which undoubtedly is a more expert opinion than mine. But that is what I have been told. I submit that, even if it is only one per cent., it still is a very serious problem, because there are more than 150,000 live births in this province every year, and we can build all the institutions we want, but the minute they are built they will be filled.

It seems to me that in this field particularly—I am suggesting this in all fields relating to mental health—but in this field particularly, the need for large-scale research programmes is clearly indicated.

I am not now referring to a few special projects that university groups may be undertaking. They no doubt are desirable.

But I do believe that large-scale research projects are desirable so that we may acquire more information about the various types of disability which fall within the general category of mental retardation. Through such research, we may perhaps find some practical way of solving this problem, which, it seems to me, is threatening to engulf us.

Now, as I mentioned on an earlier occasion in this House, when I talked to medical staff in Orillia—which is still the major hospital in the province dealing with mentally retarded persons—they all told me rather wistfully that they had a wealth of material for research there, but nobody had any time to do anything about it.

It would seem to me that some continuing—not just some special projects as are apparently going on—but continuing large-scale research, using the material available, just the statistical material that is undoubtedly available at Orillia, if anybody had the time to classify it and process it, that should be a major undertaking of the department. Perhaps this would be even more important—I am not trying to be dogmatic about this—than building new institutions.

Again I would like to say that I think, regarding any plans the department has for the building of institutions—I am not criticizing them, I certainly think those institutions are necessary—but I am submitting to the hon. Minister that if they are all built, they are not going to solve the problem that we are up against.

There really should be some entirely new thinking and vigorous action on this problem which certainly are not indicated at the moment in the estimates that I see before us or in any statements the hon. Minister has made to us.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to refer to the 1958 annual report of The Department of Health which, I think, is the last one available. Regarding the section of that report summarizing quite briefly the work of the division of mental health, I would just like to read the first paragraph:

The year 1958 was marked by a considerable expansion of patient accommodation with lesser expansion of treatment staff. However, some noteworthy additions were made to treatment facilities and programmes.

Those words as far as I can see, reflect the same sort of situation as reflects itself in the estimates now before us, these words “a considerable expansion of patient accommodation with lesser expansion of treatment staff.” I think that is the nub of the problem with regard to the departmental policies on mental health. Too large a proportion of our expenditures is going into sheer custodial—

Mr. Lavergne: The hon. member is wasting the time of this House.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): He is quoting his own opinion now.

Mr. Bryden: I am quoting from the report of the department. If the hon. member for Simcoe East does not agree with—

Mr. Letherby: On a matter of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has made certain definite and serious charges against that old Orillia Hospital.

What irritates me, Mr. Chairman, is this, that some sodbuster has come into this House, with only 4 or 5 weeks' experience, and wants to tell the learned people of these departments how to run them. We are getting fed up with it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: I do not know what point of personal privilege was involved there, Mr. Chairman. I think I could probably raise some matters of personal privilege myself on the comments of the hon. member. But I will not waste my time over them.

Mr. Lavergne: My hon. friend is wasting the time of this House.

Mr. Bryden: However, Mr. Chairman, may I revert to the introductory paragraph that I read from the section in the annual report of 1958. I believe that the problem of expansion of patient accommodation, with less expansion of treatment staff, is a problem on which we are entitled to further explanation than we have so far received from the hon. Minister.

It would certainly appear to indicate undue emphasis, or an undue proportion of emphasis, on purely custodial activity as against active treatment, and even more so, I would suggest, as against research.

That, I submit, is a matter to which we should be giving serious consideration. I am not suggesting that we should be spending any less on sheer custodial care. I think probably we have to spend all that we are spending on that. But I think there should be substantial increases in some of the more constructive phases of the activities of the department.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, before I get too much ahead of me, may I be permitted to answer some points of inquiry? The hon. member has made some observations which are worthy of note.

The first, I think, was that we are infected by institutionitis. This is a new disease, I have not heard about it before. I would like to discuss the clinical picture and the symptom complex with him. I can assure him that, if it means what I think he intended to convey, we have not caught it. We are not infected with institutionitis insofar as the care of the mentally ill or the mentally retarded is concerned.

Indeed, I have been rather hesitant to urge upon the government a too ambitious programme of building new institutions for the very reason which he mentions, the fact that the new drugs may be the breakthrough which we have looked for—not for days, months, or years, but for centuries.

One has very vivid recollections of, even in 1953, talking to the health boards which operated the sanatoria for tuberculosis in the province, and how they had ambitious construction plans, all ready to put into operation or bring to reality, and overnight almost—by the development of certain drugs and certain new concepts of treatment—the picture changed. The great breakthrough came.

The result is that we are faced with vacant beds, and a great clamour has arisen as to how they should be used effectively.

For that reason, I have cautioned the government not to let us plunge too actively forward in the erection of new buildings so that we may not be subject to the criticism of being infected with this new disease—institutionitis. That the care is entirely custodial is completely and totally not in keeping with facts.

Mr. Bryden: I certainly did not mean to imply that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Had my hon. friend listened to the speech I made, I think 3 weeks ago, concerning our mental health programme, he would have seen there that in our community clinics—this is an operation going on within the communities—our specialists saw 22,000 patients in the year 1958 for 129,356 separate interviews.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by no stretch of the imagination can it be said that we are interested in putting people in institutions. These clinics were set up for the express purpose of keeping them out of institutions, and it is doing that very thing. If I can recall my figure I quoted at that time that 67 per cent. of all first patients being seen in these clinics are the patients suffering for the first time from mental breakdown or emotional upset.

They are being seen in these clinics, in the out-patient departments of our hospitals, in psychiatric units of the general hospitals, and in the day-care and night-care centres which this department operates.

This, I think, is a very, very dramatic and progressive forward step. I think I can—with all honesty and with a good deal of pride—say that it can be credited to the forward-looking programme which this government has initiated.

I am not going to repeat what some of my hon. friends on this side of the House did draw to the attention of the House, much to the discomfiture of my hon. friends opposite. We, in this party, do not need to hang our heads in shame about what we have done.

There is much yet to do, and our ideal objective is still on the horizon. But I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that we are steadily pushing forward—oh, perhaps not as fast as our hon. friends would do. But if we went as fast as we would like to and as they would like us to, then they would be able to bring the criticism to bear upon us that we were wasting the taxpayers' money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I say something about the new drugs. I grant that none of these new drugs were developed in our hospitals. We are not in the pharmaceutical business, nor is this our line at all.

I must admit, also, that I do not believe very many of these drugs were developed in Canada, or even on the North American continent. I believe that most of these drugs can be credited to the pharmaceutical houses, particularly in Europe. Switzerland, for instance, is one of the countries, as I believe are Italy and some others. It is unfair to single any one of them out. Many European countries have been the centre of pharmaceutical development for centuries, not only for the past two or three years.

But I have this to say to the credit of our hospitals, Mr. Chairman, that a great deal of the clinical research upon them has been carried out in the Ontario Hospitals. Much new knowledge has been gained as to their effects, as to their value, as to the dangerous features concerning them, and as to any side-effects that may come about from their use.

Now, my hon. friend was quite interested in mental retardation. I give him full credit and full marks for his interest in this field, because it is a tremendously fascinating one. As I have said frequently over the past month, it is attracting a great deal of society's attention, because perhaps, it is a last great barrier that is facing medicine. It is the last frontier, I believe, that medicine has to push backwards. And it is a tremendously large one, and a tremendously great one, indeed.

But I think that my hon. friend's figures, insofar as the retarded are concerned, are just a little bit high. I am afraid we could not begin to tax the people of Ontario enough to build institutions to accommodate the mentally retarded.

Mr. Bryden: That is my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Just a minute. Let my hon. friend not get his shirt in a knot.

I want to tell the hon. member that our figures, and these are world-wide figures, do not apply to Ontario only. Let him not leave the impression that the people of Ontario are any more prone to retardation, mental breakdown or emotional upsets than the people of any other country in the world. And, indeed, I think our figures are a little bit better than some countries, but they are average in the main. Two per cent. to three per cent. of our babies are born mentally retarded in some degree. Of those, only .2 per cent. of the babies born will need to be institutionalized for life.

Now, this is quite a different figure. It is still too large a figure. We are perfectly willing to recognize that. We are perfectly willing to admit that. But the picture is not quite so hopeless as my hon. friend would point out. Now, I am not trying to paint this in any rosy hue. I am not looking at it through rose-coloured glasses. I think I have taken about as realistic a view of it as any person associated with the problem in the province of Ontario.

But I do say to you, and I say to every hon. member in this House, Mr. Chairman, that there is hope in this field, and I think that we can look forward with a good deal more hope to the future, than we have been able to in the past.

My hon. friend has pointed out that there is need for large-scale research projects.

Now again, I have to point out that, while I am a great believer in research—and I want to make this very clear, sir—research is not something one pulls out of the ether, nor is it something that anyone can do. I do not care how wistfully my clinicians at Orillia, or anywhere else, may talk about research.

I think that every physician secretly nurses, within his being, the idea that he would like to engage in some tremendous research project. I have done it.

After I read the old book by Sinclair Lewis, Arrowsmith, I was sure that I was going to be one of the world's greatest researchers. I landed up in Port Perry as a general practitioner, and was very happy there. Indeed, sometimes I wonder why I left it. But I think, Mr. Chairman, that every physician nurses, within him, the idea that he can contribute something to help humanity by way of some original piece of research. But very few of us ever become involved in research, I do not know why. Perhaps it is from the angle of economics, because research has always been a poor paying business.

But then it calls for sustained interest. It calls, I think, for a special type of personality. Insofar as I know, concerning the whole field of medical science, I can think of nothing more discouraging and more frustrating than research.

I would be no good in research because I am too impatient. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, there are far too few trained personnel willing to devote their life to research. It calls for a lifetime of devotion. One cannot go into research this month, this year, and decide he is going to go into something next year, and go back to research. One has got to decide he is going to spend his lifetime at it, and he stays there.

I would point out, however, that we have a good deal of original research going on, and that we have a fairly large research project going on at Orillia. One of the professors of the department of pharmacology, and one of the professors of the department of pediatrics, here in Toronto, go to Orillia regularly in the conduct of certain research projects.

I would say that, until we open the unit at Beck, the people from the University of Western Ontario were going there to draw the material for their research. And this, I again repeat—and I am very proud to repeat—is a piece of original work that has never been undertaken, to our knowledge, anywhere else in the world. This is now going on with continued and renewed activity at the University of Western Ontario in London. It is a very large-scale piece of original research, 4 departments of the university are involved.

Now, it is all right to say that we have got a wealth of material. We do have a wealth of bodies, but that does not necessarily mean that we have a wealth of research material. The hope for clinical research in retardation has not been very bright. We have not had much cause to believe much can come of that, at least at the present time. But we believe a great deal can come from original basic research, and it is in these fields—metabolism, biochemistry, endocrinology, psychology and genetics—that we hope to derive a great deal of knowledge.

In other words, we hope to learn something that will make possible the control of mental retardation by prevention. Whether this will be possible or not, human beings being what they are, I am in no position to tell.

Of the matter of expanding facilities, expanding buildings without a concomitant expansion in staff is quite out of keeping with that. I believe our hospitals are staffed as well as the best on the continent, and better than a great many. Our staff is better than one to three patients, and this is considered just a little better than the ideal.

Now, where my hon. friend got his figures, I do not know, but these are the figures which are factual. I have compared them with the recommended standard as laid down by the American psychiatric association and the Canadian psychiatric association, and I do not think, again, that we need to hang our heads in shame when we look at them.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, so that I will not be told that I am out of order, we are discussing mental health?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Belanger: Very well. Now I will not be called out of order, due to the fact I want to discuss this problem, and I think this is the time, although I realize the hon. members feel that they have had quite an afternoon, quite an evening of it. But, unlike what my hon. friend has said on the other side there, that we are a bunch of poppycock or something like that, and that "we come out here and we do not ask questions—"

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order.

Mr. Belanger: I say that this is the time and place. And if we must do the thing right, and not be called out of order and told to bring it up later on, then I think this is the place where I should bring it.

Some time ago, I wrote to the hon. Minister of Health asking the number of patients in the mental institution in St. Thomas, coming from the county of Essex. I received that answer from him, I thanked him for the answer, and I will say this, that the number is quite substantial, and there are also some attending the institution in London.

Now, my purpose behind this was that I wanted to make quite a presentation to him in regards to an institution for Windsor. We, in the city of Windsor, do feel that there should be that type of an institution in the city, and certainly not because of what might be going through the hon. Minister's mind now, that we have that type of people there. That is not the case.

There are many reasons which I could present for the establishment of such an institution in Windsor.

However, since then—last week, in fact—the hon. Minister received a delegation from the city of Windsor, which substantiates my statement that the people of Windsor were thinking along those lines. This was a very capable delegation, comprised of people who know this type of work because they are connected with it. They presented quite a brief to the hon. Minister.

Now, what I have to say is this, that I would certainly appreciate it if the hon. Minister of Health, and other hon. Ministers on that side of the government would do as certain hon. Ministers do, and that is, when delegations do come before them, to present some very important points pertaining to a certain area, that they ask the delegation whether their member has been informed of their presence. Regardless of whether the member be on the side of the government or in the Opposition, he should be told of the delegation appearing before them. The delegation should be asked whether the member knows of what they are going to bring up.

I certainly would have appreciated it very much if, at that time, the hon. Minister of Health had told the delegation that there are 3 members representing the Windsor area. None of us was even asked to be present at the presentation of that delegation.

I do not want to bring this to a lengthier affair than it has been so far, but I am going to ask the hon. Minister, regarding the questions that were asked by this delegation in the brief that they have presented, what are the chances of the city of Windsor getting what these people asked for? If the hon. Minister would please put that in writing to me, I would certainly appreciate it very much indeed, so that I could carry that back to the people of Windsor.

I certainly do not like the fact that certain things are done and just kept secret, so that we know nothing about it. I want to say this to the hon. Minister, that we are representatives of the people, and we have a right to know what is going to transpire.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to answer that before the hon. member speaks further?

I did meet a group from Windsor, but I must make it very clear to the hon. member that, no matter what members have been involved in delegations that have come to me, I have never followed the practice of asking them if their member was aware that they were here, regardless of what political stripe the member was. When delegations come to see me, I consider they are coming to see me about business that affects the people of the province of Ontario, coming within the scope of my responsibility, and I try to treat it in this manner.

Now, I will admit to you, sir, that, usually, delegations are accompanied by their members, and delegations have been accompanied by members who sit on the Opposition benches. I hope the day will never come when such a member is not equally welcome in my office, which is after all an office belonging to the people of Ontario who sit with me and support this present government.

But I would say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member that I always considered that it was my responsibility, as a member, to seek out my delegation and to accompany them—indeed, to arrange with the Ministers in question to meet my delegation and to meet me with them.

However, far be it from me to read a lecture to any hon. member on what I believe the duty of a member is.

I still cannot undertake, Mr. Chairman, that I will invite the members, or advise the members that a delegation is coming to see me. I still believe that is their own responsibility. I can assure the hon. member he will be welcomed if he comes, even if he comes alone, at any time concerning the business of his constituents. I would be delighted to meet him. I do not think it is necessary to write him, sir.

I gave my answer to the mayor, the city clerk, the member of the board of control and the 3 doctors who accompanied them. There is no secret about what I told them, sir. They asked me the question the hon. member has asked and I gave them the answer to the best of my ability. I told them that we were aware of the need, and the problem, in Windsor, that it was high on our priority list, and that it depended entirely on the availability of money and staff.

Mr. Lavergne: Mr. Chairman, please give me a chance to speak. That hon. member has been on his feet 75 times, and I would like to have this opportunity anyway.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. member has something to say—

Mr. Lavergne: Well, I was not sent here to ask questions, I was sent here to do something for my constituents. I want the hon. member to understand that, and I think that was a very foolish statement to make.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have a very good hon. friend in the Opposition who spoke, and I just want to allay his fears or any fears that may have been instilled in his mind, that he feels that, because they sit in the Opposition, they are the only ones not notified.

I want to assure him that, in many instances—and I feel that I have a great following in my own riding—there are delegations from my own riding who, for personal reasons and others, come up and see the various departments without asking me, as a member, to appear with them. The hon. Minister has so ably presented this, that whether an hon. member is in the Opposition or in the government—if the delegation wants the member included that is fine, and if they do not, then I would say to you, my hon. friend, that they are royally received here, whether they come from a constituency represented by an able person in the Opposition or by a government member.

Mr. Belanger: I say the hon. member is the mayor of his municipality, but he does not happen to know the mayor of our municipality. He has the idea that, unless a member is on the government side, he cannot get in to see any of the Ministers.

Mr. Lavergne: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Thompson: May I say that I can stand up here and I can ask questions. I appreciate the courtesy on the part of the hon. Minister of Health in answering these questions. I think that he appreciates, with others in the front benches across there, the role that this Parliament plays in a democracy, more so than some others who seem to be irritated because we are interested as an Opposition in asking questions.

Mr. Lavergne: Mr. Chairman, I was not sent here—

Mr. Thompson: Now, referring to what the hon. Minister was saying about not suffering in any way from institutionitis—I think that was the term—and I would be the last one, as a non-medical man, to make a diagnosis for a doctor. But I feel, sir, as do others, that there has been a tendency in his department towards this institutionitis. Indeed there is a tendency on the part of the government towards it.

I listened very carefully to the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions and I find that with the hon. leader of this government, the only contribution he made in connection with The Department of Reform Institutions was to say: "Bigger and better institutions."

I would like to suggest this is somewhat the same with The Department of Health, and

I am quoting now, from Canadian Welfare, with respect to the population in Ontario Hospitals:

Ontario Hospital population from 16 to 64 years of age increased between 1941 and 1957 by 17 per cent., and for the age group 65 and over the increase was 153 per cent. Of all the old people admitted, one-third are discharged within a year, and most could be discharged some time. Perhaps these facts indicate——that, under different circumstances, many of these old people need not have been admitted at all.

Canadian Welfare goes on,

Economic and social pressures are acute for the great majority of the aged and few, if any, services exist to meet their needs in communities. Are they being forced into mental institutions and hospitals by economic and social conditions?

Some minimum supervisory services, suitable housing and job and personal counselling are necessary to support and protect many in the crises that are normal to their age and condition. Such services might cut the admission rate, and also make possible the discharge of large numbers using mental hospital accommodation.

It goes on, sir, to talk of a recent survey which was made of the Ontario Hospital population. The survey showed that there were 2,000 patients who do not receive or require treatment, nursing or supervision. The behaviour of this group is said to be controlled, and their freedom unrestricted. The question asked in this article in Canadian Welfare is why, then, are these 2,000 people in hospital?

In part at least—and this is said in the article—an answer to this question is also suggested by the results of the survey. No fewer than 7,382 patients—one-third of the total in hospital—have no contact with their families. It is in the interests of the community, as well as of these patients, that the limited resources of families in this connection should be supplemented and strengthened by community services.

I know, under The Mental Health Act, which I read and studied, that now there is provision to do a great deal of community development work. But I still think that we have had a tradition in the past, of putting people in institutions, and not looking at the community services.

I would like to just raise this question, and I do so with a desire to know what the situation is. I have always wondered under the hon. Minister's definition of an integrated hospital whether he excludes psychiatric beds from the grant that is given by the hospital services commission. Am I wrong in that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Psychiatric hospital beds get a larger than normal grant.

Mr. Thompson: They get a larger grant? Well, can a municipality have a psychiatric ward? Really, what I am getting at is—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is being encouraged, very, very definitely, oh, yes.

Mr. Thompson: Well then, I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister on this, because I feel that the local area is where the people should go for mental care, where they are near their own homes. I think this gives a chance for them to be visited and to visit their own family circles.

The point I am making is that, in this whole mental health field, and I know that under the hon. Minister's aggressive leadership in this that he has many plans, but there is in this great area of care, the fact that his department has had a long and very tiring disease of institutionitis.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: One question should be answered. The bed grant toward psychiatric units in general hospitals is $8,500, as opposed to about $5,000 to the general hospital bed.

Now, I think that I answered this question about the old people who are not getting treatment. This is a segment of our population which does cause us a very great deal of trouble. We have, at the last count, about 5,000 patients over 65 years of age who are orphans, literally orphans. They have nowhere to go, they have no one to care for them. We are parent, friend, brother, sister, everything else to them and we are home, the hospital is home.

For them, as I pointed out at that time, the infirmity type of institution is being established because no community owns them, no community wants them. I feel that it is the responsibility of the government to look after them. By the process of time, and by the evolution of time, and by new methods of treatment, I think this problem will wear itself out, but it will simply be by the evolution of time.

The attitude, I suppose, in the past—and in the very recent past—was towards the custodial care, because that was about all the hope there was.

But, I pointed out a few weeks ago that our discharge rate last year exceeded our admission rate. This, I think, is one of the most hopeful signs that we have seen, and it lends more weight to our belief that we are heading towards the long awaited breakthrough in the treatment of the mentally ill.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, in part for the benefit of the hon. member for Simcoe East, whose interest in this topic is so short lived that he has gone out for another smoke, I just wanted to rise and document the views of the sodbusters on this side.

Mr. Lavergne: He does not smoke. He gave it up a year ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, we have listened, and those of us who are extremely interested in this, and as laymen, have done our very best to absorb the difficulties and the complexities of the subject. We have listened, in many instances, to nothing but smearing from the other side of the House, as to what we are attempting to do.

As a matter of fact, the last time we raised this in the House, the hon. member who has gone out for a smoke—

Mr. Grossman: He does not smoke and he does not drink.

Mr. MacDonald: —rose in the House and heaped abuse upon us. He not only heaped abuse upon us, he referred to each of the afternoon papers as getting down in the gutters because they had documented the statements that we had dealt with.

Fine, the hon. member is now back.

Then, after he had finished, I said to him, "You have accused me of just going after headlines on this matter," and I quoted to him the views of the Canadian mental health association, and asked whether he thought the Canadian mental health association was also just going after headlines. To this, he made a very significant comment. He said, "Look my friend, basically you are right, but this government cannot do it all at once."

In other words, he conceded the basic validity of our whole case, and confessed that he had been indulging in a little bit of Tory defence of the government.

Mr. Letherby: On a point of personal privilege, may I say the hon. member is never wrong. Nothing that he ever says is off base.

He had the gall to stand up in his place in this House the other day and tell the fire marshal that he did not know his business. The fire marshal made a definite report about conditions at that old hospital, and said it is not a fire trap. The hon. member had the poor man sitting down here, in front of the front benches, and he got up and tried to crucify him. That is the type of man he is.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. member is indulging in it once again, because as—

Mr. Letherby: Oh, just rest your rowboat.

Mr. MacDonald: I commented at that time—I drew to the attention of the hon. members of the House and he missed it—that, whereas it may be true that the fire marshal said it is not a fire trap, the fire marshal also issued instructions that the night staff should be doubled for the protection of the people. So, therefore, apparently, the fire marshal had come to the conclusion that the people were not safe.

Mr. Letherby: He just suggested they should have a few more night nurses so they could look after people like the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: So maybe one of the great benefits, Mr. Chairman, of the visit of the hon. member for Woodbine and myself was that we got the fire marshal up there, and when he examined it, he came to the conclusion that there was not enough staff, and he caused it to be increased. So perhaps the hon. member should not be so hasty about all of this effort to heap abuse on those of us who are trying to get the government to do what he himself concedes is basically right.

Mr. Letherby: Come again?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the reason why I wanted to rise, is because of his earlier comment. Furthermore, it is implied, in many of the other comments, that we are not fair in suggesting that there is an undue emphasis on the custodial aspect.

So I, as a sodbuster, will take refuge, Mr. Chairman, in quoting the views of a professional person.

After our visit to Orillia, the Toronto Globe and Mail published a series of letters on January 19. Interestingly enough, they did not have a single letter to support their editorial, otherwise I am convinced it would have been printed.

But among those letters, there was one from Dr. T. P. Dixon from Sudbury. I do not know Dr. Dixon.

Mr. Lavergne: Maybe he is a crackpot, the hon. member does not know.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know Dr. Dixon, but I am told that he is a man who is a—

Mr. Sopha: A splendid fellow.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, a splendid fellow, who is very familiar with this field. In fact, maybe the hon. member for Sudbury can confirm it, but I understand that he has done some research work under federal grants in this very field.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, if you can get silence for a moment, Mr. Chairman, let me quote a few paragraphs from Dr. Dixon's lengthy letter in the January 19 issue of the Globe and Mail. Down about the third or fourth paragraph, where he built up his case, here is the first conclusion he comes to, and I am quoting:

Our mental hospitals have largely become custodial institutions that do not delve beyond the superficial symptoms of mental disease.

This is largely due to the lack of trained staff, but also due to excessive pressures being put on what trained staff is available for the large numbers of chronic, neurological and senile, deteriorated patients who do not require expert psychiatric treatment, but rather routine medical and nursing care, in a safe and comfortable institution.

Hence many of our mental hospitals could be turned over to general practitioners, releasing our trained psychiatrists for research in the acute social and psychiatric conditions occurring in the community today.

And the final paragraphs of his letter are these:

It would appear ridiculous to spend 10 years at university, becoming a psychiatrist, only to be relegated to a custodial institution for largely administrative duties. It is a well-known fact that the environment of the hospital, away from the community pressures and responsibilities, does more to clear up psychosis than any therapy given. But the causes of the psychosis lie in the patient's ability to cope within his own community not the hospital.

Surely a psychiatrist who can manage 1,500 psychotic people and a staff of 1,000 is capable of supervising further staff of trained social workers and psychologists, instead of working with two hands, he could work with many to ease his burden. I feel—and this is for the benefit of the hon. Minister, despite his desire to glorify the programme beyond its merits. I would concede him that he has given great leadership in the field, but in case he attempts to build it beyond the merits of the case, here is the final sentence in Dr. Dixon's letter:

I feel that a more radical and imaginative approach in the field of mental health in this province is required.

Mr. Letherby: My friend, that man to me sounds like a crackpot.

Mr. MacDonald: Now you see, Mr. Chairman, here is another example. Here is a man who is a professional working in his field, and these experts—these sodbusters on the back benches of the Tory party—make that kind of comment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I ask my hon. friend if he appreciates the fact that the province of Ontario, his province, is leading America in the treatment of mental diseases?

Mr. MacDonald: It is not, it is not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I say it is.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I say it is.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, do I have the floor, or if the hon. Prime Minister wants to interrupt me—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Furthermore, I want to say to my hon. friend, now listen, he is not supposed to speak all night—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh yes? Well, go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I know he would like to blather around here all night.

Mr. MacDonald: All the hon. Prime Minister has done is come in here and blow his top because things have not been going as he wanted them to go. Let him just sit in here and pay attention. The rest of us have been here all the time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that this province has the widest and the most imaginative treatment and policies in connection with the treatment of mentally ill people in America.

Mr. MacDonald: It has not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: And it has the finest system in America.

Mr. MacDonald: It has not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Furthermore, I would say that it has the most forward-looking policy—

Mr. MacDonald: Tra la, tra la—

Hon. Mr. Frost: This province has done more to remove the stigma, to remove the things that are attached to the treatment of mental illness, than any other jurisdiction in Canada or in any jurisdiction in America. Now, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he study this matter, and take a good look at the assessment by the people who are familiar with the problem. I can show my hon. friend the letters I received from the mental health league in connection with the policies of this government and what we are doing. Now I will send them to him, and he can get out of some of the gloom and depression that he lives in.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say to the hon. Prime Minister that I am not going to argue with him, but that what he has said simply is not the case.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it is the case.

Mr. MacDonald: If I want to rouse him unduly, I can say that the province of Saskatchewan, in terms of experimental work, in terms of one of their hospitals—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: What hospital?

Mr. Grossman: Shangri-La.

Mr. MacDonald: —has been given the psychiatric award for the whole of the North American continent.

Mr. Lavergne: Why does my hon. friend not go back to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I have two specific questions that I would like to ask the hon. Minister in this connection—

Mr. Lavergne: What vote, just to bring me up to date?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, we are on the vote of mental hospitals.

Mr. Chairman: I do not know where we are.

Mr. MacDonald: You mean your members do not.

Mr. Chairman, my question to the hon. Minister is this. I assume from all that has gone on, with regard to the appropriation for the removing of the old wings in the Orillia Hospital, that there is going to be no such appropriation for this year. Will the hon. Minister give us some indication of when this government intends to replace those older wings of this Orillia Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The only indication that I can give is that it is quite necessary to remove the patients first. I have no intention of recommending to the government that any more new buildings be erected on the Orillia property, because I think Orillia is large enough now. Indeed, I think it is too large.

Therefore, until such time has come, when I can remove at least 700 patients from Orillia, I cannot tell the hon. member when those wings will be demolished.

It would be my hope and this is subject to change, so do not pin me down, "x" number of years from now, and say that I said thus and so, it is my hope that, when those two wings are taken down, they will not be replaced.

I want to say a word or two, Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet, about this much talked about addition to the night staff, and I want to clear this apprehension or, indeed, misinformation concerning it. The fire marshal did not recommend that the night staff be doubled.

Mr. MacDonald: The newspaper accounts are wrong.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Just a minute now, my hon. friend. Let him not get his shirt in a knot. I have the report on my desk. The hon. Prime Minister of this province insisted that the night staff be doubled and he insisted that it be doubled contrary to my better judgment, and he is the boss.

Mr. MacDonald: Why was he worried?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: He had a very sound and logical reason for being worried. Of course he did, and the reason was this. We have people up there who are not quite as retarded as some others, and some of them do tend to play with fire, and we were very much concerned, because of all the publicity, that some of these people might cause fires.

For that reason, the hon. Prime Minister said that it would be in the best interests of all concerned that we take more than usual precautions, and he insisted, and again I repeat that against my better judgment and in a professional sense for once I bowed to a layman—I will never be able to live that down with the profession—and agreed that the night staff should be doubled.

But this, I assure you, Mr. Chairman, is only a temporary measure and, as soon as the fire training, or training in fire drill and fire protection measures, has been gone over with every member of our staff, the staff will go back to the normal complement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would just like to say this, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this matter. As far back as 1952, I took a great interest in the matter of fire protection, I may say not only in the hospitals and institutions but in this building itself. I may say that there was on the fourth floor of this building, the motion picture branch, presenting a highly inflammatory and unsatisfactory condition in this building itself.

The staircases were not fireproof.

As a matter of fact, even today this building, after all of the work we have done in fireproofing staircases and that sort of thing, and enclosing them and the elevators, this building itself—and particularly the portions which the hon. members are in tonight—is not too satisfactory, from a fire standpoint.

Mr. MacDonald: What vote is this?

Hon. Mr. Frost: However, may I point out the situation in our institutions. In our institutions, as long as at least 8 years ago, I asked the fire marshal to make special surveys, and provide special fire safety instructions for all of our mental hospitals in this province, and that was done. Instructions were issued at that time concerning fire drills and concerning fire safety matters.

Now, I know this, that in Orillia the fire marshal appointed, years ago, former chief Edwards of Orillia as the fire marshal's representative, who stays on the premises all the time with a staff in Orillia.

In addition to that, concerning those older buildings there, fireproofing was done to a very large extent—the encasing of elevators and stairways and that sort of thing—along the lines of work that was done on the eastern portion of this building here.

Now, that is something that has been carried on throughout Ontario, the protection, the betterment of our buildings in the province. Our buildings are now better protected from the standpoint of safety because of the steps taken to prevent fires and possibilities of fires.

I take the responsibility for doubling the night staff at the Orillia institution, and I will tell hon. members why I did it. I read about the statements in the paper, I think it was just before Christmas time, was it not? It was about that time, in any event. I read the statements that were made by the hon. member for York South, and the hon. member, I think, for Woodbine. I also read the statement that was made by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren), who used better sense than either one of them used, and—

Mr. MacDonald: Because he agreed with the hon. Prime Minister, that is all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right, perhaps that is a good sign. But I felt that we should deal with this problem in light of the unsatisfactory publicity that was given to the conditions in those buildings, although the statements made were fundamentally not correct.

When such statements are made, those things attract people who are perhaps mentally unsound or something of the sort—fire bugs or people of that sort—so I thought that it was a matter of good sense to double the staffs in those institutions until this matter becomes straightened away.

I telephoned my good friend the hon. Minister of Health who, at that time, was down in Port Perry about it, and he told me that, in his best judgment, he did not think that was necessary.

Now, I did call the fire marshal and I asked him, under the circumstances, to double the staff in those institutions until this matter righted itself, for the fear that those institutions would be subject to some fire bug or crackpot attacks of some kind or other. I had some feeling that the statements in the press might attract unbalanced people. And that was the reason for it.

I may say this, that in the Orillia institution now, and this has been the case for some years past, former fire chief Edwards of Orillia is the fire marshal's representative and lives there with a staff on the premises, and he is in charge of the staff all the time. I am satisfied that, in our institutions in Ontario, every step is being taken to protect the patients and the inmates and the people against possibilities of disaster.

I may say to you, Mr. Chairman, while talking about fire protection, that this building is not fireproof. As a matter of fact, the westerly wing of the building is probably semi-fireproof. The library itself, since the fire of about 40 years ago, is fireproof. This portion of the building, and running up from the basement to its fourth storey, is not fireproof.

We have taken every step and precaution we could to make this building as safe as we could.

As a matter of fact, some years ago, we even put a fire escape out of that window up there so that the press could get out without too much difficulty.

Mr. Grossman: We have got to look after the press.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We want to look after them. If there is ever trouble in this building, if they go out there onto that balcony, somebody will come along with a ladder and let them down in due course.

We have fireproofed the stairways in the buildings running up to the fourth floor. If hon. members look on the eastern side of the building they will see a very excellent job.

Now, as a matter of fact the centre portion of this building is far from satisfactory, and it will be some time, I imagine, before anything is done with it, because we have been spending our time and our money in connection with fireproofing the institutions in this province where children and patients and others are housed. Now that, I think, is the situation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would say that the hon. Prime Minister was very wise in increasing the staff at Orillia, and not just for the temporary reasons that he indicated. But I would also say, Mr. Chairman, if anybody else in this House had strayed as far from the estimates as the hon. Prime Minister has, he would have been chopped down long since.

An hon. member: We have been listening to the hon. member for York South all night.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, there is one other comment that I want to make with regard to what the hon. Prime Minister said. He did not press it because he is a smart enough political operator to know that he is on pretty weak ground. I refer to his comment that we were making ill-advised statements regarding the Orillia Hospital.

I am far more interested, Mr. Chairman, in the views of people who are personally interested in this field, than the political observations of the Tory party, or some Liberal who wants to back up the Tory party.

When this was all over, Dr. Griffin made a comment that has been quoted in this House already, one paragraph of which this is the official release:

Dr. Griffin praised the frankness of CCF leader MacDonald, Health Minister Dymond in the newspapers in discussing the situation.

And furthermore in an official release of the Ontario association for retarded children, I will read just one sentence:

Parents will bless the columnists, politicians, reporters and photographers who recently inspected the hospital if their reports bring government action.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, may I say this?

Mr. MacDonald: So now we are waiting for government action and this was the statement, Mr. Chairman, of Mr. Gerald Anglin, Toronto, who is chairman of the Ontario association of the retarded children institutions committee.

However, Mr. Chairman, I had one final question that I wanted to ask the hon. Minister, and it arises out of what I think is a most unhappy situation in Aurora recently, and is very much related to this.

I have been very interested, in reading a pamphlet that came out just a few months ago from a committee in New York—by the group for the advancement of psychiatry—on the basic considerations in mental retardation, and one of the final points they make is the necessity for a community programme along the lines that other members have been discussing. They say that:

A sine qua non of adequate community planning is widespread public education concerning mental deficiency. Only when there is a realistic acceptance of this problem, in all strata of society, will community planning achieve its goal.

Now, within the context of that idea, I would like to ask the hon. Minister what he feels can, or should, be done by way of adult education or community education, when we have the kind of situation that arose in Aurora a few weeks ago, where apparently, with the support of certain of the community fathers and public pressure along the street, a man who was willing to use his home for retarded persons on probation from these institutions, as a first step towards fitting back into the community, met with strong objections.

Now, it seems to me if we are going to help to get these people out of the institutions and back into the community, maybe these intermediate steps are very necessary. If people who are willing to make themselves and their homes available for this purpose are in effect going to be driven out of the community by the views of people in the community, it seems to me we face a real problem of public education. I am wondering what the hon. Minister's comment on this is.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is a very great problem. It is difficult enough to get society to accept the ex-mentally ill patient—that is, the patient who has been treated with some measure of success and restored to the point where he or she can return to the community—but, with retardation, the problem is infinitely worse, because clinically we cannot do a great deal for them.

Some of the high grade ones—and a few of the high grade ones now come to our institutions—are trained and fitted for restoration in the community. Some of the moderately retarded or less high grade, the lower grade ones, can be fitted to go back into the community but they cannot be self-sustaining. They cannot go into homes such as these. This is going to take a great deal of time. It is going to be a slow process of evolution by education.

Now, if a community or if a neighbour objects to a home being used for this sort of thing, we cannot change the situation by legislation, and we cannot change it by wielding a big stick. We hope to, and we try to, change it by a matter of education. I have said many times during the past year that two of the greatest problems—I believe I said it in this House a year ago—facing us today in this field are to fight stigma and lethargy.

The hon. Prime Minister has pointed out to hon. members that we have gone a long way in fighting stigma. The fight is not over yet by a long way, nor do I see the end of it, because it is still in the future. But we are getting farther ahead with that than we are with fighting lethargy. A great many people talk about this problem of the mentally ill, and a great many people talk in glowing terms about what should be done for them and what they would do for them. But, when we come down to cases—if I may lapse into the vernacular—and really put the matter before them, we find an entirely different problem.

May I give a case in point?

In thinking about what might be done to ease the problem of overcrowding, I was audacious enough to suggest something to my hon. leader, and he does not know this whole story yet. He is going to hear it tonight for the first time, and perhaps I will go to the woodshed after, I do not know, and I do not really care.

However, I was looking around for a method whereby the province might raise some extra money, and I suggested that a special tax be levied on certain items.

Now, to try to get public reaction—and mind you, Mr. Chairman, this was at a time when one might say interest was at fever pitch, because it was about the time the Orillia story broke in the newspapers, and we were reading letters in all of the press about what should be done and how willing the people would be to pay for this accelerated programme—I had my public relations people make a spot check survey in downtown Toronto one day at noon. They polled 500 people, and asked what their personal opinion or reaction would be if these two special taxes were levied, and 98 per cent. of them were violently opposed and the remaining 2 per cent. were lukewarm.

Mr. Singer: What were the special taxes?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, that does not matter now. I will tell the hon. member that sometime. This was just an experiment, a research project that I conducted on my own.

Now this, Mr. Chairman, bears out what I say to hon. members that a great deal is said about this problem, but when we come down to cases it is very difficult to do things.

I can remember in my own town where this very thing happened, that the opposition to it was so violent that the home was never used for this purpose. I am given to understand that our superintendent—and this is part of our education programme—himself helped to alleviate the situation, and I understand that the home is now being used as an approved boarding home.

Now, this does not happen everywhere by any means. This is becoming more and more an isolated case, because we have a large number—how many approved homes have we? We have a large number, I cannot say exactly what the number is at the present time, but a large number of approved boarding homes. We have 932 patients in approved boarding homes, and I think the average is 5 or 6 to a home. If one figures it out, that means about 150 homes, if my mathematics are good, where these patients are accepted.

The neighbours do not mind. They accept them and they are working into the community.

This is a long programme, but it is one to which we have set ourselves. I believe, with the work that our own people are doing, with the volunteer groups that are becoming increasingly active, and the work they are doing to help us, we are becoming increasingly active. Through what we are doing to help, we will be able to educate the public along this line.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I notice there is nothing in these estimates to indicate that that hospital, that the hon. Minister said would be built in northern Ontario, is being proceeded with. There is nothing in the estimates to cover that, is there?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That will be in the estimates of The Department of Public Works, which does all our building.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): I have a question, Mr. Chairman. Does the hospital plan take care of all the costs of the patient in the mental institutions of the province? If not, what portion does the patient have to pay? Another part of the question is: Does the hon. Minister's department pay anything to private institutions in this province?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The government pays. The province of Ontario, with the taxpayers' money, pays for the care of all the patients. Now, the patients may have to pay something for clothing, if they can afford it. But we do provide a good deal of clothing, too. The department does not pay anything to private institutions. Certain institutions have been approved under The Ontario Hospital Services Commission Act.

Mr. Troy: The final selection then, of the place for the hospital in northern Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have not yet made a decision.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I have item No. 14 on vote 613 explained, please, by the hon. Minister? Item No. 14, the $65,000.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is the amount of money that it will cost us, in this year, for the care of patients in private institutions.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I made a visit to Orillia last fall with the Hamilton branch of the retarded children's association, and certainly there was no doubt in their minds that the conditions were undesirable in the sense of being overcrowded.

Now, in light of what the hon. Minister has said in regard to his opinion that he would not replace the wings when they are taken down—the older wings—are there plans for facilities to which these children will be transferred? Is there anything being done at all?

I know that the Hamilton branch, in co-operation with the branch from the peninsula, are petitioning, or asking, to have a school in the Niagara peninsula, and they have even selected a site. We have not heard yet if there are any provisions for a building to move these children into.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have already answered these questions. It is in the speech I made 2 or 3 weeks ago. I have answered this question over and over again. The plans that we are making are underway now.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister a question in conjunction with the Ontario Hospitals. I understand the public works programme in each of these hospitals is under the jurisdiction of The Department of Public Works in Toronto. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Innes: The works department, in the Ontario Hospital set-up, is under the jurisdiction of The Department of Public Works?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They have offices or buildings on some of our hospital properties, but that has nothing to do with the hospital.

Mr. Innes: Yes, I understand that. But does the hon. Minister not feel that the superintendent of the hospital should have more jurisdiction over the public works in their own hospitals? Now, every time they have to blow their nose, they have to come down and get permission from the authorities in Toronto, and the superintendent of the hospital has no jurisdiction whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What is the hon. member talking about? He should be specific.

Mr. Innes: Well, he has no jurisdiction over any of the works programmes that are authorized in his own hospital.

Mr. Grossman: Where?

Mr. Innes: That is the hospital in Woodstock, for instance.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: If it is a major construction or renovation programme, that is done by The Department of Public Works. Maintenance up to a certain amount, is done by the hospital maintenance staff, which comes directly under the authority of the superintendent of the hospital. Anything that department does is their business, and I have all I can do to run my own department without trying to run the department of an hon. colleague.

Mr. Innes: Well, I will grant the hon. Minister that. But in the works departments in some of these hospitals, their staff varies from 60 sometimes to 170, and it fluctuates up and down.

Hon. Mr. Allan: There is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Innes: People are continually complaining. Well, if it was planned properly, they would be able to employ a steady staff throughout the year.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would not recommend to this government that we give authority over Public Works staff to the superintendents of our hospitals. They have all they can do to run the hospitals.

Mr. Innes: Well, all right.

Vote 613 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister desires that the final estimate be held over, so I will move that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions, begs leave to sit again, and moves the adoption of the report.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I will say that tomorrow we will have the estimates of The Department of Agriculture. But also there are items on the order paper to clean up, such as bills, committee matters, private bills and the like.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister advise us more specifically—and I do not expect great detail—if he intends to take any controversial bills tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, if there is anything controversial we will hold it over.

I move the adjournment of the House.
Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.25 of the clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE MUNICIPAL TAX ASSISTANCE ACT, 1952

Hon. W. K. Warrender moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Municipal Tax Assistance Act, 1952."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides that the Act does not apply to public lands set apart as a wilderness area.

THE PUBLIC UTILITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Warrender moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Utilities Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is to make it clear that this provision does not apply where debentures have been issued for local improvement works.

THE ASSESSMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Warrender moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Assessment Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are several amendments here. Some are for clarification purposes, some procedural, some basic changes, but all these bills that I have just read will be going to the municipal law committee.

THE PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Commercial Vehicles Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment brings a lessor of a vehicle operated for the transportation of goods, where a lessor engages or pays the driver, within the scope of The Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The fourth annual report of the Ontario water resources commission for the year ended December 31, 1959.

2. Report of the Ontario cancer institute for the year ended December 31, 1959.

3. Report of the Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation, 1958 and 1959.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I would like to direct to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost).

Now, so that I be technically in order, this particular question was prepared yesterday and forwarded, and a request came forth to wait until today. Today I did not resubmit it, but presumed that yesterday's notice was sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, the question is as follows. Is it true that conversations had been held, in recent days, between the federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) and members of this government? If so, what is the nature of these conversations?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Now, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to answer the question. I was sorry that I was not here yesterday, at the opening of the session, to answer the question then. The answer to the first part of the question is yes, conversations were held yesterday. They, as a matter of fact, have been held by myself several times in recent days, and with either myself or hon. Ministers of the government. In some cases, hon. members of the House here have consulted with hon. Mr. Churchill.

Regarding the second part of the question, as to the purpose of these conversations, the answer is this. The purpose of these conversations is the continuation of Elliot Lake and of the Bancroft area as prosperous communities. That is the purpose.

Now, I should like to amplify that by saying that, within a few days, the opportunity will be given to the House to discuss this matter, either on the calling of the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources, or the resolution which is on the order paper. At the moment, however, I think that what I have said is sufficient, and I think I have answered my hon. friend's question.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to address a question to the hon. Prime Minister, a copy of which I have directed to him through you. In their letter to the hon. Prime Minister dated March 10, the society of Ontario Hydro professional engineers asked for an early reply on the issue whether The Labour Relations Act would be amended to permit employee engineers to seek collective bargaining rights under the Act. Since the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) assured the Hydro engineers, just before the conclusion of their meeting with the cabinet on March 8, that the matter would be fully discussed with the cabinet at an early date and the decision indicated to them, is the hon. Prime Minister now in a position to reply to the Hydro engineers?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The answer is in the negative.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if he is not in a position to reply, when will he be?

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): In the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He did not ask that question.

THE TERRITORIAL DIVISION ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender moves second reading of Bill No. 85, "An Act to amend The Territorial Division Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TOURIST ESTABLISHMENTS ACT

Hon. B. L. Cathcart moves second reading of Bill No. 87, "An Act to amend The Tourist Establishments Act."

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the hon. Minister say something on the second reading of this bill.

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Speaker, on first reading, I gave a short explanation on the bill and, further to that, I would say that the bill itself is pretty much self-explanatory. It simply is dealing with the tourist outfitters' establishments which one year ago were brought under The Department of Travel and Publicity for licencing as well as inspection. We have operated under the legislation as of that day for the past year, and now we want to clarify the situation, and bring the tourist outfitters in the same legislation as our tourist establishments.

So, in the first section, the hon. member will note that we have done that; we have repealed the next section so that it is no longer necessary, because tourist outfitters are already contained in the first section. The subsection deals with using the national building code by reference, if it is necessary to do so over and above the present regulations that we now have, and the further section has to do with the licence to establish a tourist outfitters' camp.

In other words, it will enable us to approach The Department of Lands and Forests and other departments for their approval, particularly in regard to selling before we issue the licence to establishments.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in connection with subsection 3 of section 2 of this bill, at least one municipality came before the private bills committee and requested permission to have a similar section in its private Act.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Let him just wait, Mr. Speaker, until I finish. The request, as I recall it, was a little broader than is here, and there was reference to some American codes as well. But there was substantial objection brought to the committee by The Department of Municipal Affairs, which objected to this cross-reference, and incorporation by reference, in a private bill.

Now, I wonder if the same sort of objection should not be taken by The Department of Municipal Affairs to The Department of Travel and Publicity.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes, but, Mr. Speaker, that is a matter that was referred back to me, and I intend to deal with it in committee of the whole House. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. Singer: Do I understand, then, that the hon. Minister is going to revise this section?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am going to remove that section, with the permission of this House, you see.

Mr. Singer: He is going to recommend the removal?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PAROLE ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope moves second reading of Bill No. 88, "An Act to amend The Parole Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT

Hon. W. M. Nickle moves second reading of Bill No. 90, "An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MENTAL HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 91, "An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

HOSPITALS FOR CHILDREN SUFFERING EMOTIONAL OR PSYCHIATRIC DISORDERS

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 92, "An Act to provide hospitals for the care and treatment of children suffering from emotional or psychiatric disorders."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko moves second reading of Bill No. 96, "An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MUNICIPAL UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS ACT, 1953

Hon. Mr. Warrender moves second reading of Bill No. 97, "An Act to amend The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FACTORY, SHOP AND OFFICE BUILDING ACT

Hon. C. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 98, "An Act to amend The Factory, Shop and Office Building Act."

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to address a question to the hon. Minister of Labour in relation to this. Does he propose, either at this time or at any other time, to do something about the principle of early closing bylaws which comes within this statute?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): No, I would say no. It is a municipal matter.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 99, "An Act to amend The Public Health Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

EXPROPRIATION OR INJURIOUS AFFECTION OF LANDS

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) indicated that he did not intend to proceed with this bill through to final reading, that he was putting the matter on the order paper, and putting the matter in process in order that there might be the opportunity of study.

Now, on that basis, I would be prepared to move second reading—it might be that he would prefer to refer this bill to the committee on legal bills for consideration at this time, but I do not think that it is his intention to proceed with the passing of this bill at this time. So on that basis, and the fact that it would give the opportunity for consideration in the committee on legal bills, I will move second reading.

Hon. L. M. Frost moves second reading of Bill No. 120, "An Act to make uniform the procedures for determining compensation for the expropriation or injurious affection of lands by public authorities."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of the whole, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

NOTICES OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Government notices of motion Nos. 2 and 3.

Resolved,

That in addition to the allowance provided under section 10(1) of The County Judges Act, the judge of a county or district court of a county or district in which there is only one judge and he is the judge of the surrogate court shall be paid an allowance of 40 per cent. of the judge's fees under The Surrogate Courts Act but in no case shall such allowance exceed $2,000 in any year.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Why is this bill coming up at the present time? Is there no ginseng grown in Ontario any more?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, I have been advised that it has not been used in Ontario for 25 years. I think it was passed in 1912.

Mr. MacDonald: What is ginseng, what is it used for?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do not know even what it is. I know my wife uses a little for seasoning sometimes in a tin can. That is all I know about ginseng.

Mr. Nixon: I think we used to export it to China. I believe there is still some of it grown.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That is right. The Act was passed originally in 1912, I understand. To the knowledge of the officials we have in the department at the present time, it has never been used.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report certain resolutions and certain bills without amendment, and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain resolutions and certain bills without amendment, and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 82, "An Act to amend The Mechanics' Lien Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill will go to the committee on legal bills probably tomorrow, if the members of that committee are prepared to deal with it tomorrow. I think it would facilitate matters if it were sent tomorrow. I do not think I need add anything more than what I said on first reading, except that I would draw attention to section 7 of the bill which is the procedural section with respect to the trial of lien actions.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 83, "An Act to amend The Insurance Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, on Bill No. 83, again I think perhaps the explanation of it on first reading is sufficient. This bill should go to the legal bills committee and, if the members of the committee are willing, this also could be dealt with tomorrow morning. There are a number of technical changes there, and I would like to have the superintendent of insurance on hand to explain them to the committee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Before the next order, I would like to revert to the orders of the day and inform the House that on Thursday it is proposed that there be a night session. Now, that is despite the date of March 17, but the orders to be called on that day will be Bill No. 60 and Bill No. 61, they are the two liquor bills, and the estimates of The Department of the Provincial Secretary. Now, I would say, sir, that those 3 orders ought to provide more entertainment than any "seventeenth of Ireland" celebration.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion I would like to move an amendment, and before I move the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I should outline to you the purpose and significance of the amendment.

It is my presumption that the House leader will call The Department of Agriculture estimates.

Before those estimates are called, I suggest to you that there is an item on the order paper, in the form of Bill No. 86, that is an Act relating to The Farm Products Marketing Act. I suggest that it would be unwise for this House to consider the very important estimates of The Department of Agriculture, and the significance of those estimates on the economy of the agricultural industry, without first disposing of Bill No. 86.

Mr. Speaker, it is the wish and intent of the Liberal Opposition to not only vote against this bill, but to demonstrate to this House that the bill and the proposed legislation should not be brought forward. The proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, is very dangerous legislation, and is contrary to the legislation respecting marketing that has been enacted in this House heretofore.

In very simple language, Mr. Speaker, it will deny the producer the right to appoint his local board as his agent to assist the marketing of his respective produce. Also, it puts complete autonomy into the hands of the overall provincial board.

Mr. Speaker, we have evolved a marketing system over a period of years, and now in one gulp, if you will, one fell swoop, we will destroy the initiative and the—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that the motion should be put. But I point out that the motion is out of order, very definitely out of order for this reason: That on the motion to go into supply, there is already an amendment moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition, in connection with a very extensive want of confidence motion in this government, which I think is giving good government to Ontario. I think that precludes any such motion as this; I think the motion is out of order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, this may be the time to debate this once and for all. I have heard—not only have I heard, but we have considered—the suggestion that the hon. Prime Minister just made to this House—that is, that only one amendment can be made to the motion relating to supply, and that is on the occasion of the budget address.

Mr. Speaker, if that be the rule of this House, then I suggest that this House has been acting illegally and contrary to rules all these years. The leader of the Conservative Opposition, back in 1934 to 1943, used this very motion to enunciate his programme and his platform and his policy, and it is enunciated in Lewis, substantiated by May, that historically speaking—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Sir James Whitney, on March 12, 1895.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —historically speaking, this particular amendment was used, Mr. Speaker, to bring matters of attention to the House where not otherwise permitted.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): But they must refer to the estimates.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly. Exactly. And I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that my motion relates directly to these estimates. All we have to do is look at May, Mr. Speaker, to realize that we can make an amendment relating to legislation.

And, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been discussed many times in the English Parliament and in the Canadian Parliament, and the rule has been relaxed, Mr. Speaker, over the years, to permit reference to substance of legislation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would point out—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Therefore, I would submit my motion is very much in order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that actually the motion which has been made here, that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply, is really only a matter of form. Actually speaking, all that is necessary is to call the order and, on the calling of the order, the Speaker would automatically leave the chair.

Now, I would say this, that I think under those circumstances this motion is very clearly out of order, as is the one that the hon. leader of the Opposition has been contemplating, too—he has one in contemplation which one of these days will be out of order, too.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is the hon. leader of the Opposition finished?

Mr. Wintermeyer: No, I am not finished.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think both the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member are out of order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on this I must emphasize as strongly as I can, irrespective of the expert across the way, that we have on 3 or 4 occasions in this House, this very session, proposed a similar resolution. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), that the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair be amended by striking out all the words after “that”, so that the motion reads, “That Bill No. 86, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act, be withdrawn from the order paper for the duration of this session.”

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before you put that motion, or before you render a decision, I would like to make a comment on this. Because, Mr. Speaker, I am interested not only in the merits of the case, but I am interested equally in the kind of amendment that has been made and the arguments from the opposite side of the House that it is out of order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to document the contention that this is completely and fully in order. As a matter of fact, for the benefit of the hon. members to my right, we had a motion which is in almost identical terms.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member if he and his friends had a caucus today about this matter?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, for the next moment or so I would like to have a private discussion with yourself. The others can listen in if they want to, because if there is any argument that this is out of order, I want to submit to you that this argument is completely erroneous.

In the first place, I will concede to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is some difference among the parliamentary experts with regard to exactly what is in order in presenting a motion to amend going into supply. For example, in Bourinot, who is normally not the accepted expert—just a minute now—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Are the two parties opposite collaborating on this?

Mr. MacDonald: No, we are not.

Mr. Speaker, if I may quote from page 419 in Bourinot, he indicates that the scope is as wide as possible for amendments when you are going into supply. In other words, that it does not even have to relate to the estimates that are coming up. Let me quote this relevant section, Mr. Speaker:

On this point, it is observed by an eminent authority that the ancient constitutional doctrine that the redress of grievance is to be considered before the granting of supplies, is now represented by the practice of permitting every description of amendment to be moved on the question for the Speaker leaving the chair before going into committee of supply or ways and means.

In other words, every description of amendment.

Now, I concede once again that Bourinot is not the authority whom we normally accede to. But, Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention that whether we do or not, this has been the practice in the province of Ontario. If you go through Lewis, you will find case after case—in fact, if the hon. Prime Minister persists in it, I will read him 6 or 8 cases that go back for 30 or 40 years, indicating that complete scope has been permitted.

Let me read just one of them, Mr. Speaker, that was moved in 1923, on April 11, by Mr. Castleman of the United Farmers of Ontario. It sounds as if he were trying to rationalize his way back into the Tory party.

However, Mr. Speaker, just to indicate to you the nature of the amendment that he moved when going into committee of supply, it read as follows:

In the opinion of this House, in view of the fact that the first plank of the United Farmers' platform was to cut out all expenditure that was not absolutely essential, and further that the farmer members of the House were elected for the purpose of securing legislation that would have for its object the amelioration of the disabilities under which agriculture in Ontario has laboured, therefore we regret the failure of this government to live up to the ideals which brought the farmer movement into being and placed this government in power.

A debate ensued, and was continued on April 12, and after some time the amendment, having been put, was lost.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the last time when this kind of an amendment was brought into the House—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is an amendment to the budget motion. It has nothing to do with what we are talking about here at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am on my feet and I have the floor, and I have the right to have the floor.

Mr. Speaker, it was about 10 years ago when a motion was moved in this House on March 22 and 23, 1949, by the hon. member for Grey South. It is interesting to note that the motion was this:

This House do now deal with the provisions of Bill No. 135, An Act to amend The Executive Act.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): That is why the hon. member is over there and we are over here.

Mr. MacDonald: This was ruled out of order, Mr. Speaker, but the Speaker's comment was significantly this, that "If the bill had not mentioned money it would have been a totally different thing—". In other words, the only thing that made it out of order was the question of money.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that, according to Bourinot and past practices in Ontario, it is open as to the nature of the amendment. However, May makes some restrictions. May, on pages 728 and 729, says this:

Amendments to the question for the Speaker leaving the chair shall be strictly relevant to the branch of the estimates of which notice has been given, and they should not raise matters of detail which are more properly dealt with in the committee of supply.

I submit that the motion which the hon. leader of the Opposition has brought conforms exactly to these requirements. It relates to the department that is going to be brought up, but it does not deal in detail with something that more properly would be dealt with in the committee of supply.

If you needed any further argument, Mr. Speaker, on the relevance of motion, let me read a portion of May on page 260, in which he is discussing the machinery in Parliament and he is referring in this case to the official Opposition.

This is what he states:

Since the strength of modern party discipline makes a ministry largely invulnerable to direct attack in the House of Commons, the criticism of the Opposition is primarily directed towards the electorate with a view to the next election, or with the aim of influencing government policy through the pressure of public opinion.

The Opposition has a recognized right to all the facilities needed for this purpose, full information about every department of public affairs, adequate publicity through all the daily publications of reports of debates and certain rights of initiative in the choice of subjects of criticism.

May I repeat that, Mr. Speaker, "certain rights of initiative in the choice of subjects of criticism."

With regard to the last mentioned right the procedure of the House provides, as will be seen later, technical forms in which the subject of debates is left to the discretion of the House, and this discretion is conventionally exercised by the Opposition.

Among such forms are the address and reply to the Queen's speech, motions of censure and providing opportunities throughout the session, the forms connected with the granting of supply. For the Opposition, regarded as a parliamentary institution, it may be claimed that no better system has yet been devised for insuring that the indispensable function of criticism should be effectively co-ordinated and exercised in a constructive and responsible spirit.

So, Mr. Speaker, in summing up, I would just point this out, that Bourinot, backed by past practices in Ontario, states that the nature of the amendment in going into supply is completely wide open. Anything can be discussed.

May states that it must relate to the department, and I submit that this amendment is backed by each of these experts and it must be in order, otherwise one of the fundamental rights of the Opposition is destroyed in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, the coalition is working, I see.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): We are sticking up for the farmers of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, these hon. gentlemen have both come in here armed with all these law books. I might ask if they are through reading them now? I did not know anything about this. However, I would like to help put the hon. members right.

The fact that they have come in here armed with all these law books puts me in mind of a story that my old friend George Dunbar used to tell here with great relish. It related to the late Peter White, whom some of us knew very well, a very able, brilliant lawyer in this province, and he practiced in his early days down in Renfrew.

He was up in Killaloe trying a case, and he had a whole pile of law books with him. He went through these law books, and he read the reports to the magistrate, and so on, and the magistrate listened to him with great respect. When he got through the magistrate said: "Now, Peter, that was a great statement. I have no doubt that what you read in those law books is right. It is in those law books, and you have a lot of learning and no doubt are right, but that ain't the law of Killaloe."

The matters that both the hon. members read from those law books from May and Bourinot have really nothing to do with the subject matter of what they were discussing at all. After all, these matters refer to the procedures in this House, and the passages that were read were quite irrelevant.

Mr. MacDonald: What is he afraid of?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let us look at this. What is the effect of this motion? I think it is very clearly out of order. What is the effect of this motion? It is this, that this bill which is not called at all be not read again this session. Even the hon. member for Brant with all his loyalty to the grand old Liberal party, will never argue that.

Mr. Nixon: My loyalty is to the farmers.

Hon. Mr. Frost: As a matter of fact, the hon. leader of the Opposition will be quite in order to move that motion when the bill is called. When the bill is called, then he will be quite in order to move what amounts to be a hoist motion. He can move the hoist motion at that time, that this bill be not read now but be read 6 months or some other time hence. That is the point.

Furthermore, really the procedure that is being adopted by the Opposition is this, that they are in fact calling an order in this House for determination at this time which, after all, happens to be a government prerogative. Where does the government get that authority? On June 11, 1959. That is my substitute for May and Bourinot. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this is clearly out of line.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): The hon. Prime Minister just substitutes the law of Killaloe with his majority.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Speaking on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit to you that the philosophy that the hon. Prime Minister has just enunciated is a philosophy of the dictatorship of a majority. I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, concerning the authorities that have been quoted, that surely we in this House are going to follow a rule of law that customs, procedures and rules laid down should be adopted.

The authorities, I submit to you, sir, are quite clear and specific, that a member of the Legislature has a right to move an amendment on the specific day-by-day motion to go into supply. That is clearly stated in May.

Under our system of government, the great problem is the abnormal dominance by the government majority. To restrict the rights laid down for Opposition groups is just to establish a dictatorship of the majority, and riding roughshod over the rights of the minority.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word please?

In regard to the hon. Prime Minister's story about Killaloe, I would like to point out to this House that, by reciting this story of what happened some years ago in Killaloe, and that "it ain't the law in Killaloe," what the hon. Prime Minister has told this House this afternoon, and all of the people of this province, is that he is intending to rewrite the rules of this House to suit himself.

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the members I would think this ruling has to be made by the Speaker. In view of the fact that I have had the ruling which I consider the ruling in this case before me now for some time—there have been several members speak since I decided on this ruling—however, very briefly—the member for Grey South would like to say something.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Now, the hon. Prime Minister has said that hon. members come into the House armed with Bourinot and I do not know with who else, but I have not got that sort of fortification.

I only wish to present to the Speaker, in this time of crisis, a reasoned argument as to why he should rule in our favour. It may be that my point of view will be that of a layman, but a layman's point of view in situations such as this, very often is the dominant point of view and one that should be considered.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Oliver: Well, I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, in relation to this motion of my hon. leader, that I believe the motion is in order. What the hon. Prime Minister has said, seems to me to fall on barren ground. He says that it is not right, we cannot do that at this time. Why, we have done it 3 or 4 times this session already. In fact, through the years it has been done a number of times. In the federal House, it is done also.

Then we have disposed, for the moment, of my hon. friend's first argument, that it is not a proper motion. If the motion is properly worded, it is unquestionably a proper motion. Now then, my hon. friend says that it is not a properly worded motion. I would say to him that this motion is as properly worded as anyone could construe under these circumstances.

This motion, very effectively, I think, says, in relation to a matter that is deeply concerned with the estimates, and runs all through the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, this motion seeks to have the government withdraw a bill which, in my judgment, would put the farmers of this province in a political straitjacket, fashioned by a government—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask my good hon. friend—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend is out of order now.

Mr. Oliver: I am not.

Mr. Speaker: I am quite sure that this is not the proper time to deal with the bill itself. Now, I would like to point out to the hon. members, that we have had quotations from Bourinot and quotations where May quoted Bourinot, or used some of his findings. However, I feel that I must rule this amendment out of order.

Some hon. members: Oh, no, no, shame, shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, just a moment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I may say that, after a long membership in this House, I never heard of hon. members interrupting the Speaker before.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Prime Minister got up—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think all of the members of this House will agree that this House could not proceed except on the principle that when the Speaker rises to his feet and asks for order, that order is maintained.

Mr. Oliver: And never brought back.

Mr. Speaker: Now, I would point out that I am afraid that this would set a difficult precedent if I allow this amendment to stand.

For instance, we are considering the motion of the hon. Prime Minister that we go into supply to take up The Department of Agriculture estimates. This amendment moves that Bill No. 86 be withdrawn before the estimates can be pursued.

It is apparent to me that this bill can be dealt with when it comes before the House, and certainly more properly dealt with at that time, than it can be at this time.

I am afraid it would lead, perhaps, to this danger, if I allow the amendment to stand.

Take The Department of Health, for instance, the estimates for which were practically passed yesterday. Now, it is quite possible that many, many more bills concerning The Department of Health will yet be introduced into this session of the Legislature.

In my mind, there should not be any connection between the two, because we may go a little further at that point, and say that we cannot pass the estimates of The Department of Health because we are afraid that some legislation may come in the way of a bill in the future, and we would like to vote against it.

So on that basis, I rule this out of order. I rule against the amendment, on the basis that any bill can be more promptly dealt with on second reading, rather than at a time like this.

Mr. Whicher: We are going to appeal that ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Whicher: Injustice once again.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Call in the members.

Hon. J. A. Maloney (Minister of Mines): Killaloe could teach you fellows some things.

Mr. MacDonald: Bush law.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the Speaker's ruling will please say "aye." All those opposed please say "nay."

Mr. Speaker's ruling was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the ruling upheld.

House in committee of supply; Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, before considering these estimates I might say to my hon. friends opposite that I have not, as leader of the House, called these estimates prior to the matter of considering Bill No. 86, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act with any intent, or anything of the sort.

I very readily give to my hon. friends the undertaking that this bill will be called shortly, and that there will be the fullest opportunity of debate in connection with it.

I might say to my hon. friends that, as a matter of fact, in the plans that I had before today, I had intended to call this bill, but representations were made to me by one of the farm organizations to hold the matter over, and accordingly I did.

Now, that is all there is to the matter about which we have been having this great dispute.

I say that to my hon. friends opposite, that today with the members of council and with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow), I had the opportunity of hearing read the brief of the Ontario farmers' union, in which we had a deputation so large that it could not get into the council chambers at all. For the first time, in my tenure of this office here, I had to hear them in two rooms.

I would like to send a copy of that brief to the hon. members opposite for them to see how strong the support is for this particular bill.

I would say to my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver), and to my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. Whicher)—who are from very important areas of Ontario, from which come some of the good people who today were with us—that some of those people are sitting in the galleries today and will bear out what I say.

Their brief was very, very strongly in favour of Bill No. 86. I feel that my hon. friends opposite should take a little time to think this over, and perhaps change their minds as to the effect of this. I urge them to do that.

Might I say, however, that this is the purpose of my making these remarks:

The consideration of this bill, which I only considered in a routine manner, came from the fact that one of the organizations asked me to hold the bill over, so that if they cared to make representation, they could.

I will give my undertaking to my hon. friends opposite to call the bill as soon as possible.

ESTIMATES,

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, in rising to present the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, I might say that this is the fifteenth time it has been my privilege to present estimates of a department of government in this House, and the fourth time to present the estimates of what is, in my opinion, the most important department of government, The Department of Agriculture.

I feel that, in presenting the estimates, much more is accomplished through discussion as we go through the estimates than any so-called cut and dried remarks that the Minister might make in presenting the opening of the estimates.

But I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is a very comprehensive department. In my opinion naturally, as I said, it is the most important department of government. Not only does it represent the farm people of this province, but all the people of this province depend on the agricultural industry for their very life.

In The Department of Agriculture, I have made considerable study of the functions of the various facets of the department. Unless one went into it very thoroughly, one would not realize how widespread it is, and how comprehensive it is.

I find that there are some 32 or 33 different branches, institutions, and department farms and boards which come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture.

With that in mind, Mr. Chairman, and in view of the importance of agriculture to our economy, and in order to streamline agriculture for the days which lie ahead, a reorganization of the department was undertaken earlier this year which divided the department into two definite divisions, that of production and that of marketing.

I think we all realize that perhaps we have made greater strides in production, as is shown by the fact of farmers being able to produce 3 or 4 blades of grass where one grew before. But we have certainly lost sight, in the great strides that have been made towards greater production, of the fact that it is just as important—or possibly more so—for the farmer to be able to properly market the product of his toil as it is to produce the commodity in the first instance.

With that in mind, recognition will be given to that important part of agriculture, that of marketing, by having it directly under the supervision of an assistant Deputy Minister of marketing.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion there is nothing wrong with agriculture. I think the farmers have kept pace with the development which has taken place. But the unfortunate part of it is, as far as agriculture is concerned, that everything else has got out of pace with agriculture.

I think the farmers of this province and on this continent, as a matter of fact, have kept pace with development, mechanical and technological changes, and have made great advances. But, I would say to the House, unfortunately the farmer finds himself in a position unlike that of any other segment of our economy, and that is that he cannot put a price tag on the goods which he produces. That is the great problem which faces agriculture, not only in this province and Canada, but in the United States and in many other parts of the globe.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go into great length in elaborating on the work of the department at this point. But I think there are a few things that are being carried out in the department which I should bring to the attention of the House at this time.

Due in large measure to a decline in the average prices received for field crops, and unfavourable weather for production of fruit and vegetables, the gross value of agricultural production in 1959 was somewhat lower than that of the previous year. Gross value of production last year amounted to $1,170,000,000, as compared to $1,188,600,000.

Improvement in livestock and dairy production offset, to some degree, the reduction in other farm products, particularly in wheat and fruit and vegetable crops.

Cash income in 1959 was somewhat higher than in 1958. Cash income last year amounted to $867,302,000, as compared to $863,409,000.

Increased cost of goods and services needed by the farmer, in his operation, again cut heavily into the net income of the farmer. Net income for 1959 is estimated at $345,000,000 as compared to $381,048,000 in 1958.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, it is just the matter that the farmer unfortunately cannot put a price tag on his commodity.

Ever-increasing cost of machinery, fertilizer and other necessary goods and services cut deeply into the farm pocket book. It is a regrettable fact that all other forms of industry are able to put a price tag on their commodity, while the farmer is forced into the position where he has to sell on a market already plagued by surpluses.

Gross production in Canada is down by 7 per cent. and it is down by 16 per cent. in the United States.

It might be of interest to this House that, in the decade which has just passed—and these are figures which have been compiled in the United States Review and World Report—we find that only two segments of the United States economy dropped during the decade from 1950 to 1960, and these were the farmer and the bondholder. During the decade 1950 to 1960, the net income of the farmers of the United States dropped by 22 per cent. and the net income of the bondholders in the United States dropped by 19.8 per cent.

In that decade, for instance, the farm labour in the United States increased their net income by 25.9 per cent.

I will read hon. members only a few of these: Textile workers only went up 3.2 per cent.; telephone employees 22.4 per cent.; paper workers, 20.2 per cent.; school teachers, 26.8 per cent.; chemical workers, 24.4 per cent.; construction workers, 24.8 per cent.; packing house workers, 64.3 per cent.; auto workers, 32.5 per cent.; and steel workers, 43.2 per cent.

I just point that out to the hon. members of this House, Mr. Chairman, to emphasize the fact that, with the great prosperity which they have had in the country to the south of us, the farmer did not enjoy a degree of prosperity. Indeed, his net income was reduced over the past decade.

Agriculture is facing a crucial time. Costs of production are continuing to rise. This state of affairs makes it imperative that our governments should take every possible step to encourage the expansion of markets both at home and overseas.

We should also take a searching look at what has happened in the United States, where it is reported that it is costing the United States government $1,000 a minute in carrying charges, or $.5 billion a year in carrying charges of surplus stocks.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that governments in Canada should take a good look at the experience they have had in the United States in connection with programmes to support farm commodities.

One of the most gratifying developments of recent years has been in increased appreciation of the importance of the farm as far as our provincial and national economic position is concerned.

Probably, as a result of our rapidly increasing population and expanding industrial activity, more thought has been given by urban people to the importance of adequate food production, particularly in view of the decreasing number of farms in the province. In that respect, it is interesting to note that, since 1948, the number of Canadians working on farms has fallen by more than 400,000—from 1.2 million to less than 800,000 today. In the same period, Canada's population has risen by over 4 million.

Further major changes, both in the size and distribution of Canada's population, are expected during the present decade. It is certain that Ontario will show the greatest economic development and the greatest population change in this period.

The production of 40 per cent. more food, in a period of 10 to 15 years—and doing it with a smaller labour force and fewer farms—is the problem that confronts agriculture today.

Already part of the answer is seen in larger farms; farms more heavily mechanized and operated under efficient management.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this points out the importance of good farm management practices and emphasis on good sound orderly marketing.

For some years past, farm management has been given considerable emphasis by The Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Factors such as yield per acre and yield per animal have been stressed, and information has been brought to the attention of the farm operator through personal contact, meetings, short courses, and demonstrations including the mass media of radio, television and the press. Factors such as labour efficiency, output per dollar invested, size of operation, combination of enterprises, and other related ones have not been considered to the same extent in former years by a large percentage of farmers.

The programme of the department has followed basically along mass extension methods that are widely used at present, so that the important principles and fundamentals of a successful farm management programme may be brought to the attention of as many farm operators as possible.

The interest in seeking assistance in farm management by farm operators has increased a great deal in recent years. The soil, crop, and livestock programmes of the department have continued to emphasize, to a greater degree, the relation of recommended practices to the overall farm unit. In every county and district in the province, this trend has continued, so that farm management has become an integral part of the projects undertaken through existing organizations—such as soil and crop improvement associations and various livestock improvement programmes.

Information is also made available to livestock producers through dairy herd improvement associations, as well as cost of production studies on a wide number of individual crops. The department has also made available the services of specialists, where required, in such specialized areas as farm drainage, farm buildings, fruits and vegetables, and tobacco.

In keeping with an increased interest among farmers for more individual service, there are 26 counties and districts in the province in which The Department of Agriculture, through the agricultural representative, has organized farm management associations; some of these have more than one association. These group studies have been more intensive, and operators have entered into them, in order that they may become more familiar with detailed phases of farm business management, including the use of the Ontario farm account book.

While, to a large extent, farm management in general has been on a mass media basis, in order to proceed beyond the level of basic overall factors, farm management cannot be done by a mass media alone. The Department of Agriculture has continued to increase the assistance available in farm management on an individual farm basis.

During 1960, the farm management programme of the department will include an expansion of associations which involve all phases of the farm business, individual consultation, and periodic visits to association members.

In addition to that, it will include individual non-association services by extension branch personnel, continued availability of subject-matter, specialists, and co-ordination of the departmental resources towards increased combined assistance in the area of farm management.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that to the farmer of tomorrow it will be more and more important that he be the best possible farm manager.

The recent relaxation of British restrictions against dollar imports is expected to have a beneficial effect as far as Canadian agriculture—and particularly that of Ontario—is concerned. With the elimination of import controls, Ontario firms are preparing to launch a campaign featuring Ontario-grown produce.

The first move to stimulate the overseas market will take place at the British ideal home show in London this month, at which more than 100 Canadian firms will exhibit consumer goods. Of this number, some 30 firms will sample and sell, food products. This show will be followed by the even more important British food fair in September.

This step to recapture the overseas market is particularly important to Ontario. That is evident from the fact that 100 per cent. of the milk products, canned fruits and vegetables, dry beans, tobacco, soya beans, winter wheat; 50 per cent. of all the meat products, and a large percentage of seeds exported from Canada originate in Ontario.

For this reason, the marketing division of The Ontario Department of Agriculture, through Ontario House, London, is doing everything within its power to promote export in processed farm products. I feel that these shows provide a good opportunity to move in on the British market.

The food exhibit at the fair is largely made up by Ontario firms. But it is particularly worthy of note that two of our farm marketing boards are participating. They are the cheese producers and the tender fruit growers.

That Ontario processors and producers feel that much benefit will be derived from the showing of Ontario products, is evident from the fact that Ontario fruit growers, in co-operation with the Ontario fruit canners, have built up a promotion fund, close to $50,000 on the 1959 pack, to promote trade in Ontario canned fruits. This fund will be augmented from the 1960 pack, and the Ontario government will participate on a grant basis up to 50 per cent. of the money spent.

Following the close of the British ideal home show, the windows of Ontario House, which has a valuable location in the centre of the west end of London, will be filled with food products from Ontario.

I am confident that the farmers and fruit growers of the province will benefit as the result of this promotion.

Farm safety has long been a serious and costly problem. In the past, many Department of Agriculture sponsored meetings, demonstrations, and bulletins have helped us to focus attention on it. 4-H tractor maintenance clubs were organized, and have been conducted annually across the province since 1949. Farm and home week at the Ontario agricultural college featured safety demonstrations in 1954, 1955 and 1959. Several bulletins and circulars were published, and realistic exhibits were placed at the Canadian national exhibition, the Royal winter fair and other farm meetings.

However, in 1958 it was recognized that, if farm safety programmes were to have the desired impact, it would be necessary to take safety programmes to the farm people, rather than wait for farm people to come to safety programmes.

It was realized, as well, that no provincial farm accident statistics were available on which a sound safety education programme could be based. An accident survey organized by The Department of Agriculture in Bruce county in 1956-1957 had shown that farm people were eager to devise some method of combating the farm accident problem.

During the summer of 1958, extension branch personnel each reported on that. As a result of this action, an accident report form was developed which was adaptable to IBM coding and analysis. It was then decided to organize a provincial farm accident survey, to record all accidents happening to farm people in a 12-month period—March 1, 1959 to February 29, 1960.

To acquaint farm people with the details of the proposed survey, a provincial farm safety conference was held at the Ontario agricultural college, February 10 and 11, 1959. At this conference, the 250 farm delegates indicated support for the project. A farm accident survey committee was established in each county and district in Ontario, under the direction of the agricultural representative. More than 5,500 farm people volunteered as accident reporters.

Provincial statistics have been released by the department on a quarterly basis throughout the survey.

I might give the hon. members just a few of the statistics from the 9 months' survey which indicates as follows:

SUMMARY OF ACCIDENTS

MARCH 1, 1959 TO DECEMBER 1, 1959

Total number of accidents	5,966
Fatalities	225
Permanent injuries	220
Temporary injuries	4,389
Days off work	73,244

Medical bills	$ 429,071
Property damage	3,707,751
Average medical bill per person	97
Average property damage per accident	657

Mr. Chairman, this gives the hon. members of this House some conception of the hazards which there are on the farms of this province at the present time, and the great need for a well balanced farm accident and safety organization.

Here is a statement as to future plans.

(1) Fourth quarter forms are now being coded. A fourth quarter statistical report will be issued.

(2) An interpretative report of the 12-month statistics will be issued during the summer of 1960.

(3) Each county and district will be provided with a statistical report of accidents which happened in their county or district.

(4) Ten counties and districts are continuing the accident survey for a second 12-month period.

(5) A farm safety council has been or is being organized in each county and district to carry out a safety education programme based on results of the survey.

(6) A provincial farm safety council will be organized on March 21, 1960, to co-ordinate farm safety education programmes. The council will include one farm person from each county and district in Ontario, representation from organizations within the field of agriculture, and Ontario Department of Agriculture officials.

Since their inception, the Ontario agricultural college, the Ontario veterinary college and Macdonald institute have made a great contribution to agriculture, both on the farm and in the farm home.

It is with full appreciation of the importance of the work being carried on by these institutions, and their impact on the economy of agriculture, that it has been decided that a complete review of campus activities be undertaken, in order that even greater efficiency in teaching, reasearch and administration may be obtained.

With that thought in mind, a complete review of the institutions has been undertaken by Woods, Gordon and Company, of Toronto.

Under the terms of reference, this organization will make a study designed to provide for greater co-ordination in the operations and services offered by the 3 institutions. Particular emphasis will be placed on the possibility of centralizing certain of the administrative aspects of their operations, which are now carried out individually by each institution.

At the same time, an analysis of the cost of operating each institution will be undertaken, in relation to the revenues derived from charges made against persons receiving such services. Included in this category will be the cost of general tuition, teaching, research, extension services, conference facilities, accommodation and food services.

It is the feeling of the government that such basic information should be obtained before any consideration is given to a programme of reorganization which conceivably might result in a change in the status of the two colleges and Macdonald institute.

I might say that a representative of Woods, Gordon and Company has been working on this survey for nearly two months at the Ontario agricultural college, and he expects to complete the study some time in the month of May.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I ask the hon. Minister one question relative to that?

Assuming for the moment that the agricultural college did become a university, what would become of the extension and the research services presently carried on in the interests of agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, if any step is taken along that line, of course they would come directly, as they do now, under The Department of Agriculture. Well, they would be located there but the administration would be through the department. There would be no changes in that respect.

Each day it becomes clearer that agricultural development in northern Ontario requires careful planning for the future. In the north, good soil and proximity to existing markets are two of the important factors requiring careful attention.

With this in mind, the Ontario government plans to expand its programme of agriculture development. It is the intention to develop a co-ordinated programme involving various departments of the government.

Land which has been determined as suitable for full agricultural production will be made available for future development as required. Existing lands that are felt to be unsuitable for agriculture will be gradually diverted into more suitable uses.

Plans are underway whereby concentrated agricultural development will be encouraged where there is suitable land near existing marketing potentials. A uniform method of appraising land, suitable for agriculture development, will be established by a provincial private lands liaison committee, composed of personnel of The Department of Lands and Forests and The Department of Agriculture. It is intended to consolidate agricultural development, and to encourage farmers who are located in remote areas to relocate in existing communities.

A recent study conducted by The Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, and The Department of Agriculture, in Glackmeyer township in the Cochrane district, will be used for the basis of this expanded agricultural programme.

The Glackmeyer survey indicates that certain lands, remote from necessary services, which are otherwise suitable for agriculture, be reserved for future development, and that the expanded use of existing cleared lands in suitable areas on good soil types be undertaken.

Surveys will be conducted in the remaining sections of the north with a view to more adequate land use and expanded agricultural development.

Hon. members of the House are aware that last year the Parliament of Canada passed a crop insurance bill, providing for the making of agreements with the provinces, to provide for payments by Canada to each province that passes a provincial Crop Insurance Act. The payment is to take care of 50 per cent. of administration costs and limited loans based upon losses suffered.

Up to the present, the only province to pass the necessary provincial legislation is Manitoba. Its Act is on an experimental basis, and applies only in specified test areas for 3 crops—wheat, oats and barley.

I would like to inform the House that the law officers of my department feel that the suggested participation of Ontario should be given more study before enabling legislation is presented to the House.

I am therefore suggesting that consideration be given to a select committee of the Legislature being appointed to look into the matter. It is obvious that any insurance scheme must be set up well in advance of the beginning of any crop season. It is therefore obvious that any bill presented to the House at this session could not result in workable operation for 1960.

In view of the importance of the matter, I feel that it should have the careful consideration of a committee of hon. members of this House before any further step is taken.

I might say, for the information of the House, Mr. Chairman, that the agricultural committee of inquiry into the broad field of marketing has been meeting. The committee inquiring into all phases of production and marketing of Ontario's crops, which was appointed last year, is continuing its exhaustive study into all aspects of the production, marketing, transportation and consumer buying of farm goods.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): When can we expect this report finally?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I was just going to come to that.

In this connection, I would like to inform the House that it is not the intention to carry out any comprehensive reorganization of marketing in this province until such time as the committee's findings are before us for consideration. Only those things that are essential, in the interests of our marketing plans, will be dealt with, until such time as there has been an opportunity to consider the suggestions and recommendations of the committee of inquiry.

And I might say, Mr. Chairman, I have an interim report from the committee of inquiry, if any hon. member of the House would like to see it. It is rather comprehensive in connection with the work, the meetings, and the briefs they have heard during the past year, since they began operations sometime in mid-summer.

And I might say in reply to the hon. member for Brant that they feel that it will possibly be April 1961 before they can bring in their report.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has told us that he has the most important department in the government, and with that I concur. I feel that agriculture in this province is going through trying times, and that it is a very important department. However, when he tells us that nothing is wrong, I am sorry that I cannot concur with those remarks.

I do want to congratulate him on the farm safety programme that has been carried out throughout the province this year. I do feel that this was one place where we did need a great deal of study and a great deal of initiative on the part of this provincial government.

Reference was made to the Ontario agricultural college, and I want to congratulate him on taking the initiative in trying to reorganize that department and make a study of it, because I do feel that it was long overdue. I do feel that the farmers across this province will certainly welcome such a move.

As hon. members will remember, 3 years ago I brought a resolution before this House, and I notice this comment in an editorial in the Farmer's magazine in December:

NEW STYLES FOR ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE

Premier Frost announced that the Ontario agricultural college will emerge as one of the 4 new Ontario universities through the addition of an arts college at the Guelph campus. Friends of the Ontario agricultural college may be tempted to ask at first uneasily: "Will the college lose its agricultural tone, its place as a centre of farming and educational life?"

Our ultimate reaction is enthusiastic. The establishment of the decentralized series at the universities throughout the province will offer a welcome alternative to the expense and the inconvenience of going to the two or three Metropolitan centres for college education. Those farm boys and girls who may be interested in a course other than agriculture will especially welcome the chance to live on the attractive campus at Guelph.

From the general standpoint of agriculture education, it seems to us that in these days of swift and complex changes, the agriculture students will find great benefit in working out on a campus where the art subjects—history, physiology, economics, philosophy, languages and literature—will get increased emphasis.

And so it goes on.

I do want to say that I feel it is a step in the right direction. But I would also ask the hon. Minister if he will give due consideration to maintaining the agricultural status for which this college has been known throughout the years. To that end, I would very humbly suggest to him that he should give the head of the animal husbandry department, or the head of the field husbandry department a little bit more authority in the running of that college. If it does become a university, I feel that it is inevitable that they must have more control over the farm projects at that university.

I do feel in this respect it will gain a great deal of prestige, and will still maintain the great reputation that the graduates have had throughout the province and throughout the world, for that matter.

In looking over the budget for agriculture this year, we do find that the budget continues to take a very small slice of the pie, so to speak. When the budget did come out in the Toronto papers, we saw the diagram and the pieces of pie. But the agriculture piece has got so small it was not even mentioned this time.

I do feel that we must take a greater sense of responsibility. We have realized that it is a depressed industry, and if it is a depressed industry I think it is about time that we get a little bit more than the 1.5 per cent. of the budget. Half of that goes to colleges and schools throughout the province, so actually we are getting about .75 per cent. of the budget for agriculture.

I was sorry to note, in going over what the hon. Minister had to say, that he made not one reference to the farm marketing in the province. Actually, I was really concerned, because I do feel that in this province in the last 3 or 4 years—in fact, since I have been in the House—this has certainly been one of the main issues of discussion. If the hon. Minister has read the newspapers at all in the last few days he certainly cannot ignore it.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I thought a change would be as good as a rest.

Mr. Innes: I thought the hon. Minister was certainly very lax in not saying one solitary thing about marketing. However, I do want to refer to some of the remarks he has made previously.

A couple of years ago, before the hog marketing plan came into effect, in a speech to the Ontario federation of agriculture at the King Edward hotel, the hon. Minister told farmers that he favoured producer control marketing plans. He had little regard for back concession farmers who complain but do nothing to help the cause. He felt there was no room for two farm organizations in Ontario.

He went on: "I do not propose to sit on a fence," he told a cheering group of some 400 farmers, "and I reserve the right to express my own opinion. Also, I hold no brief for any interest trying to take advantage of this province's basic industry, which is agriculture."

He went on and said: "It browns me off to see farmers from the back concessions—and I am a back concession farmer myself—complain and criticize all the time, when they should get out and do something about the problems themselves."

"Provincial marketing legislation," he said, "gave farmers the power to do just about anything they pleased in selling any product."

"But I ask you," he said, "to get out and do a selling job," and then, "I do not know anyone who can do a better selling job than Charlie McGinnis."

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I had forgotten I ever said that.

Mr. Innes: Now, in an editorial, the Farmer's Advocate says:

Last fall at the Ontario federation of agriculture, the hon. Minister of Agriculture stated in no uncertain terms that the present hog selling method used by the hog co-op is not in the best interest of orderly marketing.

It went on at some length, but I will not bother going into it, only to say that it is just about time that he, or some of his representatives, got down and did a little co-operative work with this organization. I would suggest that he go down to the office of the hog producers and get some of these facts himself.

I was amazed last month—February 17—when the assistant Deputy Minister delivered an address to the Holstein-Friesian association at the Royal York hotel, in which he condemned the methods of the Ontario hog producers marketing board—mind you, at the Holstein-Friesian association meeting. These were very harsh remarks made, not by the hon. Minister himself but by an assistant Deputy, and I would honestly think that it is just about time that some of these policies of the government would come out, and would be given at a hog producers' meeting and by the hon. Minister himself.

I understand that yesterday the assistant Deputy Minister was to make some remarks to the representatives of the farm marketing groups at the King Edward hotel, and that he was instructed not to make too many remarks because this was getting to be a political question, and that he excused himself and did not make too many remarks.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but I think that it is just about time that the hon. Minister made some of these remarks himself. If he has something to say, and it is government policy, I think he should say it.

Some of the controversy that has been going on, some of the remarks that were made at the Royal York hotel, have been streamlined and are catching fire. In last Friday's paper, we read that the Ontario hog producers are contemplating setting up their own slaughtering method.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): What does the hon. member think of that? Does he think it is a good idea?

Mr. Innes: I think it is a pretty good idea.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Nothing sillier than that was ever advanced by anybody.

Mr. Innes: I am awfully glad to see the hon. Prime Minister back in his seat taking an interest in this, because I am sure the hon. Minister of Agriculture is not taking too much interest in it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I have been listening. The hon. member has not said very much so far.

Mr. Innes: Now, I know that every hon. member in this House has had a delegation to see him over the last weekend.

When the farmers of this province get together and prepare resolutions against the legislation of this province—legislation that is detrimental to their democratic way of operating their markets—it is just about time they got up and, in no uncertain fashion, criticized this government which is in power at the present time, and this is what they did.

Without referring to this legislation that is coming out, and without being ruled out of order, I would like to read this resolution into the record of this House:

Whereas legislation would, upon receiving Royal assent in its present form, place virtual control of producer marketing plans and commodity group finances at the discretion of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, would make it possible for the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to disregard, ignore, or revoke any and all powers presently vested in producer elected local boards, and under the Act empower the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to nationalize, seize, abolish, change or administer marketing plans and plans applicable to any other farm market in Ontario, for any part of the plan or plans, either through the farm products marketing board or any person or persons designated by him, to perform any and all such functions without in any way requesting, considering or accepting the wishes, recommendations or decisions of the farm producers and their elected representatives on the local board.

Therefore, be it resolved that we unconditionally, and without reservation, protest and oppose the purpose and draft of the amendment contained in bill such-and-such, and will do everything in our power to persuade the hon. Minister of Agriculture to withdraw, or failing withdrawal, otherwise postpone second reading of the bill until the Ontario hog producers marketing board has opportunity to study the full implications of the proposed amendment.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this is going quite a distance from where we first started out in our original co-operatives in the province. And just to give hon. members a little comparison, here in Canada, co-ops have become big business.

The total turnover for the crop year ending July, 1958, was $1,244,558,000, an increase of $92 million over the previous year. There are now well over 2,000 active co-operatives across the country, offering a wide range of services. In some fields—marketing, credit, and insurance—growth has been rapid. In other fields, progress has been steady but not remarkable.

Now, I want to refer to some remarks by Mr. Hugh Bailey, and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that every hon. farm member of this House knows Mr. Hugh Bailey, who, for many years, was general manager of the united co-operatives of Ontario, described as a true co-operative, as an organization formed to equitably distribute in a democratic way responsibility, result and ownership among the people.

To him the ideal society is one in which primary producers, consumers and co-operatives work together, with the producer growing or manufacturing the product, the co-operative distributing it, and the consumer benefiting from a first-class product made available at the lowest practical cost.

Co-operatives can be designated to serve either producer or consumer. In actual effect, they often combine both services. Producers and marketing co-ops help the primary producer to secure a fair return for his product and his labour. Consumer or purchasing co-operatives make savings for their members in the purchase of goods or services.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I humbly submit that if government intervention, such as is proposed at the present time before this House, had been inaugurated back when the co-ops first started to climb, then we would not have the growth of the co-operatives and the farm movement that we have in the province at this time. This is a perfect indication how, with no government intervention, and in a democratic way, they have progressed throughout this great Canada of ours.

I would be remiss if I did not pay some compliments to our Ontario agricultural representative service. I do feel that these representatives throughout the province are doing an excellent job. I would urge upon the hon. Minister to just possibly give them a little bit more experimental work, and not confine so much of it to our agricultural schools and our agricultural colleges in the province. In this way, I think we would be doing a service to an individual community which would be strengthening our own local organizations. Anything that was controversial could certainly be taken to a main body. In this way, we would be stimulating agriculture in our local centres.

I noticed in the paper this morning an interesting item stating that only yesterday or the day before—on March 14—a bill came up before the Quebec Legislature whereby Quebec farmers will receive government grants totalling about $5 million for the purchase of fertilizer. Farmers will be eligible for grants amounting to 30 per cent. of their fertilizer costs, but not exceeding $100 per man in one year.

I do feel, as I mentioned, that our budget is going down every year. I do not think we are going out and doing the job that we should for our farmers.

I think that there should be a greater service in the analysis of our different soils in every locality. I think the time has come when we should have a soil analysis of every farm across the province of Ontario. I believe the sooner we get to this the better, so that the farmers will know the type of fertilizer to apply to their respective soils. They are going to be more efficient farmers, and are not going to be wasting money in putting on fertilizer that is of no benefit to them. They will know the proper analysis to apply.

I am not going to say too much about deficiency payments. I think one of my hon. colleagues will deal with them very properly because I personally am not too happy with the plan. I know it has worked just exactly backwards to what it was intended to do. The small producer has been put out of business, and the large producer is losing money. But he cannot afford to lose it all so he says, "I will hang on until such a time as the price goes up" so there you are, you have it just about exactly opposite to what was intended.

I did want to say a little bit about the expropriation proceedings that are going on from time to time throughout this province. Many, many times we see hydro, we see pipe lines, we see highways going through property, and invariably some of these expropriation proceedings are lengthy, the farmer gets annoyed and he decides to get a lawyer.

So he finally ends up with a lawyer and he is fighting a government jurisdiction. I know of several cases where he has been offered a certain sum of money and, by the time he finally ended up paying his lawyer and court fees, he would have been better off if he had given the whole thing to The Department of Highways or to some of the pipe line firms in the province.

I say to hon. members that I certainly believe it is high time we looked into these expropriation proceedings, to make sure the farmer gets greater protection—especially some of the widows on some of the old farms in the province who are practically helpless when they come to some of these proceedings.

I did want to touch a little on the milk industry board. As hon. members know, the milk industry in the province is one of the biggest industries of agriculture. Approximately 70 per cent. of our revenue is derived from milk products in some form or other.

I do feel that the dairy branch in this province, particularly the inspection branch, has not been carrying out the work that I think the hon. Minister would like them to carry out.

I say this wholeheartedly because in several cases I have found where trouble has occurred, that invariably if these cases had been checked and stopped right at the start, we would not be running into our milk industry board hearings and some of the other inconvenient aspects of the whole situation.

I know that the Brantford situation particularly, was a long, drawn-out procedure over which I was personally very unhappy.

I happened to be there at the first hearing, and at that particular hearing—this happened to be on a Friday—at 11 o'clock one of the members of that board told the members there, before he started: "I am sorry, I have to catch a train at 4 o'clock and if you do not get finished today you will just have to sit again." That was not a very nice thing for farmers, producers and distributors to hear from a member of the milk industry board when they came there to try to settle their problems.

I personally was very disgusted with the proceedings that day.

Not only that, but the members of the board disagreed among themselves right before the crowd of 200 people. They were arguing about the colouring of milk. One member said, "Well, it is all right," and another member said, "It is not."

I had no quarrel as to whether it is wrong or whether it is right, but I was disappointed that the board did not come there with a purpose in mind, that they had not reached agreement among themselves before they tried to explain matters to a crowd of dissatisfied producers and distributors. I can say for myself it was very disheartening.

They had another subsequent hearing in November, which I was unable to attend. But I did come down to Toronto here, the day before the session opened, and I was told that the hearing was going to be here, and they were going to have the hon. Minister or the Deputy Minister and some of the department there. So I came down and, lo and behold, I did not see the hon. Minister, the Deputy Minister or the dairy commissioner there—not one of them.

It does distress me, to no uncertain degree, to see the hon. Minister and the Deputy Minister and the dairy commissioner being so lax on a subject that is of so much importance to every farmer in this province. The outcome of it, one would have thought, would have been of sufficient interest to them that they could at least just sit there. But no, they deal with everything by remote control, and I am not referring only to this department. This is only a first example.

Indeed, I think it is just about time, if they are not getting enough money, that possibly we include some in the estimates so that they can get time to go to these things, because I would like to see them there.

So much for the milk industry board and its aspects.

I just want to touch on one more subject and then I am going to sit down and let some of my hon. colleagues speak.

But I was a little concerned about the mention of the junior farmer loans. I understand that possibly it does have some overlapping aspects to some degree, and I am not going to criticize it one way or the other.

But I would say that it is just about time that we did something realistic for the junior farmers in this province. We should set up a development bank where they can go and borrow money.

They should not have to be hamstrung and go to a lending organization where they have to pay 20 per cent. If they go to a bank they are told: "Well, I am sorry, we cannot give you a loan." So they go to one of the finance companies, Household or some of the others—I am not saying anything against them as they are doing a good job in their own aspect. On the other hand this little farmer has to go there and say, "I am right up against it, I have to have it." "Well," he is told, "all right." So he goes ahead and has to pay about 18 per cent. to 20 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, I think there are a lot of things that the hon. Minister can get down to and do a little more work on in this department. When he says that there is nothing wrong, either he is fooling us or else I am all wet. It is just about time that we got down to a little bit of serious work.

The farmer is a little bit more important than the hon. Minister thinks he is, when he says there is nothing wrong in this province, and that marketing, in his estimation, is not worth mentioning in the estimates. I was surprised that he would not have had something to say, I really was, but I will carry on and I will have something to say in the individual estimates.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, I submit that everything else in the agricultural estimates is pretty seriously overshadowed by the one question of farm marketing and I propose therefore to deal with only that, and ramifications of that, in my general comments at the outset of the estimate.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Is this the old sodbuster?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, maybe that is the appropriate term this time. I am 25 years off the sod but doing a little bit of fighting for those who are on the sod. Heaven knows it is obvious, from what we have seen in this House this afternoon, that somebody needs to fight for the farmers even if a few of us so-called city slickers have to deal with the country lawyers on the front benches, and others, who are coming forward with some of the most incredible legislation.

Mr. Chairman, there are some new hon. members in the House who may not have heard a story which I told a year or so ago, which I think epitomizes the whole problem that we are faced with on farm marketing here.

It was an incident that took place about two or three years ago at an Ontario federation of agriculture convention down in the King Edward hotel. The hon. Minister had delivered one of his inimitable folksy, back concession speeches in which he appears to be saying a great deal but left his listeners puzzled to discover exactly what he had said—although he said it in a most delightful, rural, philosophizing manner.

However, after he had finished, one of the former presidents of the Ontario federation of agriculture, a pretty formidable looking man, Jack Broderick by name, about 6' 4" or 6' 5" —a good lineman for Argos last year, for with him they would have done better than they did—got up to the microphone and he said, "Mr. Minister we are grateful for what this government has done in providing us with farm marketing legislation. We are very grateful. However, Mr. Minister, it is obvious that legislation on the books means nothing. You have stood shoulder to shoulder with us in getting this legislation—now, are you going to stand shoulder to shoulder with us in putting this legislation into effect?"

The hon. Minister rose and gave a reply in an equally inimitable way—he talked around the question, he philosophized on the topic, but he did not give a reply. Then, amid a hushed silence, in which one could have heard the proverbial pin drop, Mr. Broderick rose and went back to the microphone. Now, everybody knows what Mr. Broderick's politics are. He does not hide his political light under a bushel, and he went back to the microphone and he bluntly stated: "Mr. Minister, you have not answered my question. Are you going to be standing shoulder to shoulder with the farmers in putting this marketing legislation into effect?"

Well, once again the hon. Minister did not answer him, but I submit to you, Mr.

Chairman, that in the last two or three years this government has given the answer to that question in actions—that is, that when the chips are down this government is not with the farmers as they are out trying to put their farm marketing legislation into effect.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): That is not what they said to us this morning.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): They will not be with you either.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You bet they will.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the best answer to the problems that are faced by any segment of our economy, including the farmers, is self-help. There is an old adage that the hon. Minister of Agriculture could add to his repertoire of rural stories, the old adage that “God helps those that help themselves.”

In the instance of farmers, as in the instance of trade unions, or any other group, it seems to me that, when they have problems, it is our responsibility as legislators to provide the legislation which will make it possible for these people to meet their own problems.

Out of this concept emerged the idea of producer-controlled marketing legislation, and we have had it on the books for years. We have been moving toward putting it into effect. But the significant thing, Mr. Chairman, is this, that whenever the chips are down, whenever we got to the point where a producer group was in a position where they finally had secured control of the market, and the industry involved begins to fight back, then the government has to choose between the farmers, whose votes they are seeking, and the industry which is around, for example, when party funds are being collected at election times—the pals of a Tory government. It is at that point that the government begins to waver, and this is where they are wavering now on the whole hog marketing deal.

I am told, for example, that out in the country today PC does not stand for Progressive-Conservative, that it stands for Packers’ Chums. As a matter of fact it is a very, very good description—Packers’ Chums.

An hon. member: Packers’ Chumps, you mean.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, they may be after a time. But at the moment they are chums, because the packers do not need to get up and fight their battles, this government is doing it for them. They can sit back, remain quiet, they do not need to come out to the front. This government here is fighting for the packers.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why does the hon. member not read the farmers’ union—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will say this to the hon. Prime Minister, and I will say it to my friends in the farmers’ union or in the federation of agriculture—that any farmer who has not yet twigged to the fact that his battle is with the corporations in the field, and that he must keep that clearly before him, has not yet grasped the basic facts of economic life.

The problem of the farmers today, as far as the hog producers are concerned, is with the packers. But bedevilling them along the way is the fact that the government has stepped in to fight the packers’ battles. They can settle their problems ultimately, but what the government is doing, as I said in my Throne speech is to play the game of divide and rule, like the old Roman emperors.

They are setting off one farm organization against another farm organization. They are setting off farmer against farmer within the same farm organization.

What this government has done is to attempt to enslave farm organizations and make them part of their political machine in this province.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald: And they do it in an utterly unscrupulous and unprincipled fashion.

The many interests of the farmer are not their first concern. Their chief interest in the farmer is the manner in which they can most effectively harness farm organizations for the strengthening of their own political machine. And the best example of it is—if I may go back to it—is what happened to Jack Broderick.

When Jack Broderick dared to get up and challenge the hon. Minister in an Ontario federation of agriculture convention, strange as it may seem, two or three days later when the board of governors was chosen in the Ontario federation of agriculture, this man who had pioneered, this man who was a past president, was not elected to it.

That is just how ruthless the Tory machine is.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): How stupid can he get?

Mr. MacDonald: Either you obey at the crack of the whip from the Tory party or else you will be licked by those in the organization who are willing to abide by it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did you ever listen to anything like that? Well, for goodness' sake.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Why does not the hon. member become a farmer and find out how they run their organization?

Mr. MacDonald: The sooner farmers today recognize that their battle is with the big corporations—in seeking a fair share of the fruits of their labour—the better. If they are willing to let the government run interference on behalf of these corporations, they will have to learn the hard way. And I will say that to my friends in the farmers' union and the federation of agriculture or anywhere.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The next thing the hon. member will be saying is that we should nominate and elect the officers in trade unions.

Mr. MacDonald: Great heavens, that is what they are doing in many instances in the farmers' organizations.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where? Well now, listen, that is about the silliest argument from the hon. member I have heard, and I have heard plenty of them.

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you what is being done, Mr. Chairman, without going into the details on this question of farm marketing legislation—this government granted legislation that provided some opportunity for producer control. They are now moving to destroy the whole basis of producer-controlled marketing.

We have in this Legislature today, Mr. Chairman, something that is just as clear-cut and just as effective as a move to take over an economic organization as when Joey Smallwood moved in and took over the international woodworkers of America.

And furthermore, I will say this, and I will not shout it from the rooftops because I say it in sadness, that when we study the legislation which Hitler put on the books, when he was enslaving the economic organizations of Germany, we will find that it was generally the kind of powers we have in this legislation at the present time.

Whether or not this government will exercise them is an open question, but the point is—it is putting them on the statute books for use when and if it sees fit to use them. That is just how serious this situation is at the present time.

If the farmers do not waken up to how serious it is—and I trust they will waken up before it is too late—then the future is grim. I will say this to my friends in the farmers' unions or the federation or anywhere else.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is what the hon. member said in the House last year, he repudiated his party at every turn.

Mr. MacDonald: We will see.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They have done—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): No, they are not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They certainly are.

Mr. MacDonald: In adolescent circles, when somebody is as excited as the hon. Minister of Health, the query usually is: "Have you got ants in your pants?" I wonder if that is the problem of the hon. Minister over there. Just do not pop up and down so much.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It could be, it works the same as itching powder.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Jumping jacks speak that way.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one reference, within the context of this whole situation, to the recent speech of Everett Biggs. I have a great respect for Everett Biggs. He is one of these rare civil servants who has a mind, and who is willing to speak it. I wish more civil servants were not quite so sycophantic vis-à-vis the government and would speak their mind.

However, I will say this, I seriously doubt the wisdom in as controversial a situation as we have at the present time, for the Deputy Minister to speak as he did. What really puzzles me is that he should have predicated his case on what I have since learned to be a completely erroneous basis. For example, Mr. Chairman, one of the main points—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member does not disagree with me now, does he?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago the hon. Prime Minister expressed some public envy of my pipe. I would suggest that his friends should take up a collection and buy him a pipe, because he needs some sort of a tranquillizer at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I know a better one than that.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps the hon. Prime Minister knows a better one, he knows his own needs, and I would suggest he use it. Once again, I would suggest that the hon. Minister of Health should not get so excited, behind there.

Now, just to take one example, if I may get back on to the theme of my presentation, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Biggs' comments. He referred to the suggestion—and attributed it to the hog producers—that the legislation was just windowdressing.

Now, the incredible thing here, Mr. Chairman, is, that this was not any pronouncement of the hog producers, this was the final paragraph in a letter to the editor, written by John Hebgin, president of the Simcoe hog producers association, in which he said:

My own feelings which I have expressed quite freely before is that the whole of the much-wanted marketing legislation is just windowdressing. It is meant for ornament but not for serious use.

Why did Mr. Biggs take the concluding paragraph from a letter to the editor and attack it as the views of the people who happened to publish the magazine? Great heavens, if I were to quote some of the concluding paragraphs of the letters written to the editor of the Toronto Globe and Mail and attribute them to the Globe and Mail, either the Globe and Mail editors or the people writing the letters should sue for damages. This is a preposterous situation; yet this is the kind of attack that was made.

However, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to concentrate my fire on Mr. Biggs, because the significant thing is this: that the hon. Minister saw fit the next day to rise in the House and to read most of what Mr. Biggs said and add, "I agree with it." In other words, either of his own volition or under orders, Mr. Biggs was pronouncing government policy. So let us concentrate fire where the blame lies.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, I might say that Mr. Biggs is a very bold young man who has a lot of ability, he is a very conscientious fellow, he has only one interest and that is the welfare of the farmers of this province.

He came to me with his speech and I said to him, "Ev, I think there are some words there that are pretty far-reaching." He said, "Mr. Minister, I think these things should be said, and now is the time to say it, and I am saying it on my personal responsibility." And the next day in the House I said that I concurred with what Mr. Biggs said. That was Mr. Biggs' stand, and I am proud of a young man who will take the stand as he did.

Mr. MacDonald: I have already said, so I am not making my comment in following the hon. Minister, that I respect Mr. Biggs for having the intestinal fortitude to speak his mind.

However, the point I am unhappy about is what he was saying in this instance and I do not propose to turn my fire at him, I will direct it to the government because the hon. Minister conceded that this was a government policy. And this is basically where our problem rests.

Having given the farmers the right to build producer-controlled marketing, the government is now taking this power away. They are withdrawing it to a central organization which is an agency of the government, in a fashion which is very, very close to the moves upon which fascist states were established.

Now, I do not throw these words "fascist" and "communist" around carelessly—hon. members could look back through any speeches I have made to confirm that—because these are not just smear terms, these are subversive terms.

But I would suggest to this government, seriously, that when they withdraw these powers to a government agency in the fashion that they are doing in their present legislation, so that they can slowly or overnight get complete control of marketing boards—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, they cannot.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yes, they can.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, there are precautionary—

Mr. MacDonald: Precautionary? Well, there was something I was going to say.

Mr. Chairman, we are getting on the bill and I am a little bit out of order, but I would like to make this observation in regard to the hon. Minister.

If this was precautionary to deal only with the vacuum that may be created when a marketing plan was voted out, why was that not explicit in the Act? I cannot conceive of the officers of the Crown, or the solicitor in his own department, making the mistake of not making this explicit—that this was to deal only with the circumstances when a vote had, in effect, washed the scheme out.

The hon. Minister has left these powers so that they can be used at any time, and this is the kind of threat that he is now hanging over the farmers—just as he hangs the threat over his own back benchers: “Either you be good or we will crack the whip and you will have to take the consequences.”

That is the kind of thing that red-blooded men and women in the province of Ontario will not take, and I predict to the hon. Minister that there will be some revolts in the rural areas, some serious revolts, and there should be.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one other example of the way in which industry is lining up with this government to concentrate its fire on farm organizations. I refer to one incident which I think should be drawn to the attention of this House in connection with the squabble in the Brantford area over the milk co-op.

These few score farmers who were seeking to build their own co-operative for shipping milk had to fight the dairies, and they had to fight, to a degree, the milk industry board.

I have already stated in the House that it was as clear as crystal not only that they had the board fighting among themselves publicly in an undignified fashion in the manner described by the hon. member for Oxford, but they had the board taking a stand which was clearly one of greater sympathy for the dairies than it was for this little co-op that was trying to come into existence.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, after all, the board takes their own stand, but as far as policy is concerned, and right from the beginning when I heard about the Brantford situation, our position was that if the farmers of this province want to organize to transport milk co-operatively, that is their business, and they should be permitted to do it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if this is government policy, I invite the government to take a look at one aspect of it. If farmers have the right to organize their own shipping, what of the ruthless lobbying against them, lobbying by an organization in this province which has so far effectively lobbied this government out of taxes that should be imposed upon them? I am referring to the automotive transport association.

The automotive transport association was in there fighting more vigorously than anybody else against this group of farmers being able to establish their own co-operative. The automotive transport association seized the occasion to send out to all the members, and to all those whom they were seeking to enlist as members, a release of September 15, 1959, entitled, “You Are in Danger.” Let me read a couple of paragraphs of this release.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, but the farmers are trucking their own milk.

Mr. MacDonald: I am quoting from the release:

This letter is not a pitch or a gimmick designed to scare milk truckers into joining the automotive transport association. It is a warning, though, it is a warning that unless you and all milk truckers like you don't take action now to protect your livelihood, there will be precious little to protect a year from now.

When powerful interests like the Ontario whole milk producers' league, the Ontario concentrated milk producers' association and the cream producers' marketing board conspire together, with the blessing of the law-makers, to destroy free enterprise in this province, there are only two alternatives: You either take it lying down and you will be forced out of business, or you will fight back. We like to think that the Ontario milk trucking population will elect to fight back.

What in effect they are saying is that a group of farmers who are shipping their milk, and who have, in effect, given a vested interest to a trucker—the farmers have not the right to reclaim this vested interest and operate on a co-operative basis.

This is what they are arguing. One would think, as one listens to the dairies and to these people, that everybody has a vested interest in farming except the farmers. If farmers try to reassert their vested interest in it, then somebody is going to clip them and the government stands idly by in many instances. In fact, if they are not standing idly by, they are sometimes shoulder to shoulder with them as in the instance of the “Packers' Chums” at the moment—PC's.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The Brantford milk producers are transporting their own milk, and that is their own business, and that is the way it should be.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what the hon. Minister said two years ago with regard to marketing schemes.

“How they market is their own business.” That lovely quote by the hon. member for Oxford, "How they market is their own business and I know no better salesman than Charlie McGinnis," and all the rest of it. How far the hon. Minister has travelled in the last couple of years.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I learned the hard way.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is only beginning to learn the hard way. Wait for the reaction to this marketing legislation.

However, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to pursue this any further now. I just wanted to point to the fact that the farmers today are in a desperate battle to get effective collective bargaining. They are faced with essentially the same problem as the trade unionist.

This government, this good old Tory government, is bringing in legislation to make it difficult, through The Labour Relations Act for trade unions to have effective collective bargaining, and now they have matched it for farm legislation in a fashion that makes my words in my Throne speech of February 9 more prophetic than I ever dared to believe. They are now bringing in legislation to make it difficult for the farmers to establish effective collective bargaining—in fact to destroy the bargaining agents they now have.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, what I wish to say might be irrelevant and if it is, I would be glad if you would rule me out of order. It might be better said in connection with the bill that we will be considering in a day or two in connection with farm marketing.

It is a matter the hon. member for Oxford referred to, the matter of the hog producers, for instance, operating packing plants and cold storage plants themselves. That is a matter in which I went to no end of trouble for the hog producers.

I am, of course, a layman, I was not brought up behind the plough like my good friend, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and some of the others. But nevertheless I have all my lifetime been associated with farm problems and I have been associated, as the hon. members here know, with the appeals to the courts where we have fought the farmers' cases, the representations in federal-provincial conferences which are really the basis of much of the farm legislation that we have today.

I have had a very great deal to do with very many of these marketing plans. One of the greatest and most difficult problems I ever faced was the problem of the tobacco marketing plan. I said this morning, to a deputation of fine-looking farm people from across Ontario, that that was one of the reasons for my prematurely grey and white hair—the fact that I have had so much to do with some of these things.

I see my friend, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil), here in the House. I had the dealing with that very complicated matter of the tobacco marketing plan in the month of January, 3 years ago, and I would say to the hon. member for Brant that my problems in dealing with that were very much complicated by the fact that right in that very area, right in the tobacco area at the time, there was a by-election and my friend, the present hon. member for Elgin, was the candidate. I can assure hon. members that was a very difficult situation, particularly in view of the fact that the CCF candidate lost his deposit. I am delighted to see—

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, they had a coalition candidate.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, may I say this, that my problems were not made less difficult by the fact that the Opposition shouted the same things that they are shouting today. But the people did not believe them, and the people voted for the candidate of good government.

Mr. MacDonald: The people are getting their eyes opened in a hurry now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I tell the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald) his by-election in this campaign was about 20 to nothing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not know how many chances he wants. He has backslid so many times. How many chances does he want?

However, Mr. Chairman, may I say this, that out of that plan this year, came the complete sale of the tobacco crop, good feelings between producers and purchasers, the end of many of these difficulties that existed for years. Moreover, I would say it has "sprung" the point of view that we heard expressed here, particularly by the hon. member for York South, who knows nothing about farming, and cares less.

May I say this year a price was obtained by those people on an auction system accepted by everybody of something around 56 cents a pound, whereas, when we were discussing this matter for only 3 years before, I think the prices were running around 47 cents. I would say that that was a concrete achievement for the people of this province.

I would say this to my hon. friend, the member for York South, that I come here with great humility, I say that was brought about by this fact, that the producers and the processors started to work together. In anything that we may have done, the fact stands out that we were able to get them to work together.

I would say that, in the matter of the hog marketing plan, I personally have spent hours with these people trying to work out their problems. I say this to the House, this afternoon that I do not think those problems are insurmountable by any means. I think that they can be worked out. But I say it has to be worked out, first of all, on this premise that we recognize that people who have something to sell must have somebody who is going to buy it, and we have to satisfy two sides of the picture. As a matter of fact, very easily, we can drive the centre of the hog business, here from Ontario out to the Canadian west. It is quite easy to do that—

Mr. Whicher: How?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, sit down and ponder that tonight and come back and tell teacher the answer tomorrow.

Mr. MacDonald: No, why does the hon. Prime Minister not tell us now, because he has pondered. Let him tell us.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, let me tell you this.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, just let me give this.

I sat with the hog producers in connection with the matter of going into the processing and storing of hog carcasses. I went to the packers and to the processors, and I arranged a deal for them whereby they could do that very thing, if they wanted to, at cost.

I may say to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), I dealt with a great packing plant in his own city, you see, and some others, a number of them.

Now, here is the problem of getting into that class of business. It is not necessary for the hog producers to go out and build storage places, or packing plants, or anything of the sort. That can all be arranged on a cost basis with these people.

The matter arose this way. If there were an auction system, or if there is a system of sale, is there an advantage in being able to kill and store hogs, which are not placed on the market, instead of sending them home, or doing something else with them, such as keeping them in the stockyards or some other place?

Now, here is the problem, and here is where the matter is left. I, myself, arranged with the packers—of which there are large and small, some 30 or 40 here in Ontario—that storage space could be had on a cost basis. Incidentally, I may say that one of the organizations which gave me the greatest of co-operation was the Barrie co-operative, which is operated by the farmers in the community, and it is a great institution. The manager, Mr. Simpson, is a very fine person.

As I say, there is no problem in obtaining the use of these plants on a cost basis. If it were a matter of storage only, in marketing of these hogs, all right. But here is the problem.

First, we cannot keep a hog carcass unfrozen for more than two or three days. I think that is right. I mean we can keep it in a chilled condition for two or three days. Now, if we go beyond that, then we have to cut the carcass up, we cannot freeze the carcass, as a carcass or otherwise, or it becomes unsaleable. Instead we would have to butcher that carcass, and we have to put it in the various forms in which the public would buy it.

Now as to those various forms, I could not begin to tell hon. members; perhaps there are some here who are more familiar with the hog business than myself, who could tell us about this, but in any event, the carcass has to be butchered and cut up and wrapped and stored.

Now, the problem is this. The minute we do that, then we are into a completely new business. We are not in the business of marketing a product. We are then into another class of business in which we have to compete with all of the surpluses that apply in the pork business and the hog business.

Now those surpluses are so great, at the present time, that the federal government itself is taking pork products, which have been stored up and accumulated over years, and are prepared to actually give them away to institutions and other people here in Canada. Hon. members can readily see the very great problem with which we are faced immediately we start talking of getting into the packing or the storing business itself.

Mr. MacDonald: They can do as well as the rest.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, I would say that was the problem, the situation was this. Arrangements were made that hogs could be slaughtered and stored at cost throughout Ontario.

Now the conditions which would apply, if that happened, are the conditions that I give hon. members here. I would say that the conclusion—and this was not in collaboration with anybody else, it was arrived at from talking among the farm representatives themselves—was reached that nothing would be so unsound as to do that.

It would not cost anything from a standpoint of plants, we did not have to go and raise millions of dollars in plants, but we had to take the risk then of marketing products in a highly competitive and difficult market under very difficult conditions. And the advice was this, that by entering into that field they could very easily meet with fabulous losses. Indeed, they would be in a field that is highly competitive, and on which the margins are so very small, and in which, at the present time unfortunately, there are large surpluses in the warehouses and cold storage plants here in Ontario and in Canada.

Now, we are meeting at the present time in regard to that problem. As I say the federal people, for a great many years now, have been purchasing and storing pork products.

Mr. Chairman, I give hon. members that explanation so that it can be of value to them in considering some of these problems. I think, when they see that, they see how utterly misleading and futile is the heading that says here:

RATHER KILL OWN HOGS THAN SUBMIT TO THREATS, ETC.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I have gone through that from beginning to end for days and hours on end. In discussing that problem, and trying to work it out, I would say I have come to the conclusion that it is completely and totally unsound from a standpoint of the producers, and I say that the very best of authorities support me in this.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to one point that the hon. Prime Minister made in the course of his remarks. Theoretically he is undoubtedly right, but in practice there is a lesson to learn.

He says that the producer and processor have to get together and work it out among themselves. He cited the case of the tobacco difficulties two or three years ago, when the government sat down with them and worked it out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us recall what happened and what provoked this.

The tobacco producers had a vote. They voted—I think it was—two to one to set up a scheme.

And what did the tobacco companies do? The tobacco companies, in effect, said, "We will not buy your product." They boycotted the whole scheme, and after this had gone on for—do not shake your head—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We settled it here—we can settle anything if given a chance.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. Let the hon. Prime Minister not mumble and fumble over there.

They in effect thumbed their nose at the whole scheme, and said, "We will have nothing to do with it." In other words, they said, although this is the law of the land, in accordance with The Farm Products Marketing Act, with the backing of a two-to-one vote, they would not buy the tobacco.

After this had gone on for a couple of months—well into the marketing season—and a crisis gripped all of the tobacco communities, then the government had to do something to bring both sides in.

I do not know exactly what happened. They sat for a whole week, and then finally at the end of the week somebody had to crack the whip. I suspect it was the hon. Prime Minister who—either at the table or behind the scenes—had to crack the whip, and the tobacco companies were forced to accept the plan. There is a moral in this, and let us transfer it over to the packers for a minute. The moral from this was that the hon. Prime Minister, after one week of bitter negotiation, finally persuaded the tobacco companies that they had to obey the law of the land as was worked out by the tobacco growers.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is not the point in those—

Mr. MacDonald: That is the point. That is exactly what happened, and if they have learned their lesson, Mr. Chairman, so that they are now willing to negotiate with the producers and buy their crops at a good price, this is wonderful.

But, Mr. Chairman, our problem, as far as the hog producers are concerned, is that this basic agreement has not yet been achieved. The packing industry has never really accepted the hog producers as the agency which is going to bargain on behalf of the producers, and this government, down through the years, has encouraged them in getting away with a hostile attitude.

The hon. Prime Minister shakes his head but I will remind him of this, that after the first 6 or 7 years of this scheme, from 1945 to 1951, when the producers were negotiating on a minimum price, The Farm Marketing Products Act stipulated that if they could not negotiate a minimum price, an arbitration board would be appointed by this government.

In 1951 the packers refused to negotiate minimum price any longer, so the hog producers sought a board and appointed their representative to the board. The government appointed a chairman to the board, but the packers in effect said they would have nothing to do with it.

In other words, the packers once again thumbed their nose at the law of the land and this government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I just give my hon. friend—

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me finish and the hon. Prime Minister can make his speech in a moment now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was only going to correct the hon. member. There is no need to read me a lecture on—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister has acquired a lot of grey hairs in the last 8 or 9 years in trying to cope with this situation. I would suggest that the hon. Prime Minister, to a very great extent, has nobody to blame but himself because, back in 1951, they let the packers get away with violating the law. This government has been running interference for the packers all down the line, right up to the present day.

The impetus for changing the selling procedures at the present time came, beyond any shadow of a doubt, from the packers. This government has espoused their cause, and is fighting it on behalf of the packers against the producers.

Just this one final observation.

It is all very well for the hon. Prime Minister to rise and say that would be nonsense, for the producers to go in and process their own product. But, Mr. Chairman, if this government is not willing to make industries sit down and negotiate, and accept a marketing scheme when it has been set up, ultimately the producers are going to be driven to this. The hon. Prime Minister thinks that, in theory, this is not a feasible proposition.

But take a look at the problem the fruit growers face in the Niagara peninsula. In the Niagara peninsula an American company moved in, bought up most of the processing plants, and closed them down—because they are not interested in processing here in Canada.

I am not certain what the situation is at the present time, because it is a year ago since I had a chat with these people. But, in their own minds, many of the fruit producers in the Niagara peninsula are saying that ultimately the only answer may be that they will have to set up their own processing plant because this American monopoly—at least it is one of the big processing plants on the American side—had come in and bought up the plants and closed them down.

Now what is the producer going to do under those circumstances?

Ultimately—because of the corporations and their irresponsible power, and the willingness of the Tory government to play along with these corporations—ultimately producers are going to be forced to go into the processing business. They will have to have their integration right through to the market.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I tell my hon. friend that, in marketing, this is the simple principle involved and I will take the tobacco plan as an example.

The problem in the tobacco plan was not a matter of boycott, as my hon. friend describes it. The point was that, first of all, here were the producers in a new plan, in a new marketing scheme in which, as those from that area know, there were some differences of opinion amongst the producers themselves.

One of the situations that was involved was the method in which the tobacco was baled and the method in which the tobacco was graded, and things of that sort.

Now, I would have to go back and look at the notes of what I did at that time. I could not exactly describe the situation, but it was a matter of the way these things were baled and the wrapping of the bales and so on.

Now, the great difficulty was this, that when those bales came into the auction market, of course, the purchasers would want to see the tobacco. It caused untold friction when these things had to be opened up, and the wrapping had to be stripped off in order that they could see it.

Mr. MacDonald: He was falling for the tobacco companies' excuses.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The question also was the number of bales that could be sold by that method and the purchasers, to my recollection, were taking the view that, by this method of wrapping and so on, we would have to sell one bale at a time, and it would take five years to sell one year's crop.

Mr. MacDonald: That was their excuse and the hon. Prime Minister fell for it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, never mind talking about excuses, let us get down to facts.

I would say this, that in discussing the matters with the producers, the principle was very simple. They had something to sell and they, the other people, undoubtedly wanted to buy. The question is this, that any person who has something to sell has to cater to the tastes of the person who wants to buy. Any marketing plan is just as simple and just as straight as that.

If we get that principle, and then we follow that principle out, the thing can work. So the question then resolved itself into this, the purchasers did not want the tobacco wrapped, the tied tobacco was not acceptable and suitable for certain of the processors. Therefore, the discussion with the producers was on the sensible basis of finding ways and means in which they could meet the requirements of the processors and, in so doing, get a better price.

Here were the processors with something to buy, with fine plants down at Aylmer and around the country, fine plants that were owned by the various processors, and it was certainly apparent that they wanted to buy that crop because from that crop came the means with which to make very fine cigarettes that some hon. members here use, and which our people seem to use in profusion in this province and in this country.

Now, our approach with those people is just as simple as this: "Now look, gentlemen, here you want to buy a crop, these people have a crop to sell. They want to market it in a way which is fair to them. I will not go into all of the details of the marketing arguments. You want to buy that crop, or they want to market it, according to certain methods." Now, what we said to them was this: "This marketing plan is here to stay."

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. Prime Minister not say that to the packers?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I will come to that. Do not talk out loud. I will tell the hon. member about that.

We said: "This marketing plan is here to stay and do not forget that it is here to stay. It is far better for you people to get goodwill and to get understanding and to get co-operation and make this plan work."

I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, that by the time we were through that week of negotiations, we reached an agreement.

That week, incidentally, was a very heavy one, between having to conduct all these negotiations and then address by-election meetings at the same time and in the same area. I may say that was a very tough week.

But in the end, we brought this out of it, that there was agreement between tobacco producers and processors on those things. We arrived at an agreement on those things, and we sold not one bale, but my recollection was 20 bales in one auction block.

How does one bring that about? One brings it about by getting the parties together and arriving at an arrangement. Now let me say this, in connection with the hog plan—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, why does he not save that for the hog producers then?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right now, wait until I tell him. Here is the problem of the hog producers, and it is just about as simple as I have told him.

In Ontario our people have hogs to sell, something, I think, to the order of 3 million hogs. Well, that is a powerful lot of hogs. The problem, from a standpoint of marketing, is not quite as simple as that faced by the tobacco people, because all the good tobacco that is grown in Canada, is very largely from the hon. Minister's riding or county down to Windsor. I think I am right in saying it, although there is some tobacco grown in the great old province of Quebec.

With our people here, they are faced with this. In Quebec is a large producing province, a very substantial hog producing province, and there are hog packing and processing plants there.

In the meantime, there has been a great upsurge in the Canadian west in the production of hogs, due to the move on the part of the western farmer to get into a diversified business. Hog production out there is becoming a very substantial thing, due to conditions which we all know about. We have a very substantial production in the Canadian west, and therefore, we are bound in Canada to meet competition from that area, which obviously complicates the picture more than in the tobacco business.

Now, of course, the hog producers here in Ontario, have 3 million hogs to sell. We have, in Ontario, very fine processing plants owned by some 40 processors, large and small.

As a matter of fact, this argument, at the present time, comes from the method of sale, and one of the things that is causing a very great division in agricultural Ontario today, is the question of the method of sale. The processors would go for an auction system of sale very much after the fashion of the tobacco auctions.

On the other hand, the other people insist upon a treaty method, and, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, in a treaty method of selling, one can never get the public support or public satisfaction on the part of the producers that one can from a method of sale which shows no favour to any individuals.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the favour at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say this, if my hon. friend would spend a little time with some of these people—

Mr. MacDonald: I have and there is no favour, he cannot prove that there is favour. This is no point.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend is hopeless. His capacity for understanding is so limited that there is not very much use of me spending any more time in trying to explain anything to him.

There is this however. We have discussed the matter with the packers. The packers accept, without reservation, the marketing plan. There is no question at all about that. As a matter of fact, I have found this, that they would go all out to assist, as has happened in the tobacco business, because we told them—and this is the point I come to—"The marketing plan is here to stay and you might as well understand that. You have to accept that. We do not intend to quarrel about that. The marketing plan is here to stay."

Now, I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, regarding the bill which we should not be discussing at this time—most of this discussion is out of order, but after all, we are not adverse to discussing it at any time—the purpose is this, that we have no intention of letting the hog plan fall into discard. Now that is why the answer is there. We are going to carry this thing through. If it falls down one way, we are going to strengthen it, and we are going to carry it through until the hog producers of this province have the best marketing plan that can be devised by human mind.

Mr. MacDonald: This is a form of verbal appeasement. Do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. Prime Minister has had 3 years to do it, why does he not do it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right. Now I would say this, that that is what we intend to do, and hon. members can write that right on the wall.

Mr. Whicher: What sort of system is he going to use for selling? What system?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well now, I would say this, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly satisfied. These people across the way, I know that they are like the cavemen of the dawn, they are all dissatisfied people—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Killers?

Hon. Mr. Frost: They carried in books this afternoon and then they quarrelled and fought among themselves and so on.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Look, I am here to tell you how to run the province.

Mr. MacDonald: His respect for the law books is illuminating anyway.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say this, that between the producers and the processors there is this simple basis that one side has a product to sell, which they desire to sell at the best price that they can get and under the best conditions that they can get, and on the other side we have processors who want to get that crop and process it and sell it to the consumers of this country and other countries. Now it is as simple as this. One side will never get anywhere by pushing the other side around. Either way, they have to sit around a table, and they have to come to a decent logical conclusion.

Mr. Whicher: Well, why does the hon. Prime Minister not do that as he did with the tobacco—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say this, Mr. Chairman, that on that I am full of optimism. I think that situation will come about. I am satisfied that under this government we will unite the divided elements in the agricultural communities. I say with confidence to my hon. friends opposite that this plan can be made to work, and this government is the agency that can make it work.

Mr. Whicher: Why does he not do it then?

Mr. MacDonald: He is trying to still the doubts in the back benches.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the fairy story that the hon. Prime Minister has been telling. He may be able to fool all those trained seals that he has on his side, but he is not going to fool us over here.

My simple question to him is this—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. members opposite fool themselves, that is the trouble with them.

Mr. Whicher: For the last half hour, he has taken us back into ancient history, and told us how he solved a problem 3 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Not “problem,” problems, plural.

Mr. Whicher: That is what I said, a problem of 3 years ago dealing with the tobacco growers and the tobacco buyers of certain counties in the province of Ontario.

Now, my question to him is this: This happened 3 years ago, and since that time we have had problems between the hog producers and the packers in the province of Ontario, I would say that even 3 years should be a long enough fullness of time for the hon. Prime Minister to solve this problem.

The only thing he has done this afternoon—and last year in many speeches that he has made in this House—is to sow more seeds of discontent between the people who raise hogs in this province and the people who buy them. He has suggested here this afternoon that his government is going to settle the problem.

Our question, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: When is he going to settle the problem?

Mr. MacDonald: In the packers’ way.

Mr. Whicher: As a matter of fact, I would like to see him settle it in some way at all, because now I have never seen anything in the agricultural world where there are more people fighting each other, packers fighting the farmers, farmer fighting farmer, and everybody, it seems, fighting the hon. Minister of Agriculture, for which I do not blame them. But I have never seen more—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He just thrives on what the hon. member says.

Mr. Whicher: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Frost: He just thrives on what the hon. member says, it is just like fertilizer.

Mr. Whicher: Well, we do not thrive on what the government opposite says.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: I wish to get back to this before getting into the estimates, and I am asking the hon. Prime Minister the very simple question—he has told us that he is going to settle the problem, he has had years to settle it—now when is he going to settle it, when?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Very shortly.

Mr. Whicher: Very shortly. But, Mr. Chairman, that is what the hon. Prime Minister told us last year. He has got to the point now where he has been trying to lead the hog producers along up till last June 11. Of course, so many of the hog producers of this province thought, well, the hon. Prime Minister has settled the odd problem in this province and perhaps he will go to bat for us.

But in this instance he did not go to bat for the hog producers. In every instance he has supported the processors, the packing houses of this province. When he gave his speech to us this afternoon, he said that he had spoken to the hon. leader of the Opposition and said that he had gone to a packing house down in Kitchener.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I did not. I never was there in my life.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Prime Minister said that he contacted a big packing plant in Kitchener.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I did not. I said there was a packing house in Kitchener that was a good one, run by the Schneider family, did the hon. member ever hear of it?

Mr. Whicher: And the hon. Prime Minister said he was in contact with them—all right, they were in here—the hon. Prime Minister was in contact with them. My question, Mr. Chairman is this: How many hog producers from the Kitchener area did he contact?

Hon. Mr. Frost: A good many.

Mr. Whicher: Oh no, we have a great big office out here at the end of Keele Street who handle more hogs than any other processors in this province, and I suggest that that is the favourite office of the hon. Prime Minister, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have never been there in my life.

Mr. MacDonald: Wrong side of the fence.

Mr. Whicher: All right, they have been in here. Do not say they have not been in here, because the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member mean the packers?

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Prime Minister said this afternoon that he has been in constant touch with the processors of hogs and he has been trying to do something and then he brings the same old promise to us here this afternoon. He says this is a problem, it is only a small problem, somebody wants to sell and somebody wants to buy.

The hon. Prime Minister said that about 45 times. He is on the hot seat in between them, and I would like him to get off that seat and get him to do something about it.

His fairy story that he has been shooting all over this province for the past 15 or 20 years is not good enough, they are finally catching up with him. They have caught up with the hon. Prime Minister in the action of the hog producers of only last week, in the action of the marketing board of this province in one of the hotels in this city only yesterday when, without one single vote against what they said, they condemned the idea of bringing in this preposterous and vile dictatorial bill which he is about to bring in in the next two or three days.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think really it is quite a bill. That is quite a bill.

Mr. Whicher: That is, if the hon. Minister has the stomach to bring it in.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I would say this, I feel that the hon. Prime Minister, with his political experience that he has had in the past, I do not think will have the stomach to bring this bill in. I do not think that the grand old dictator, that sly old fox, the Killaloe killer—I did not say anything there disrespectful, Mr. Chairman—will have the stomach for that.

As a matter of fact, I told you I have a great deal of respect for the hon. Prime Minister, I just think that he is completely and utterly wrong.

I do not think that the hon. Prime Minister will herd his rural Tory members into that caucus room and lay down the law and say that they will have to vote for this bill. Surely he will not do it, because it will be political suicide.

It may be the time when the hon. Prime Minister has reached the age when he wants to retire. But, Mr. Chairman, some of the rural hon. members of this Tory party do not want to retire yet, so do not let the hon. Prime Minister make them vote for the bill. Because if they do, the people of the ridings they represent will see that they retire and very shortly. That pension plan the hon. Prime Minister is talking about, had better go in during this session, because they will not be here to draw it after the next one.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to get involved in this. The only reason that I did was because of the fairy story attitude of the hon. Prime Minister.

Before getting into the actual estimates themselves, I wish to say that the only reason I entered this so-called discussion, as the hon. Minister of Agriculture described it this afternoon, is because, as a representative of a rural riding, I am completely and utterly dissatisfied with the manner in which the Tory governments in Ottawa and in Toronto are treating the little farmers of the province of Ontario.

I listened this afternoon, and I listened most attentively, to what the hon. Minister of Agriculture had to say. And he said this, that he thought perhaps we could get more satisfaction here this afternoon or this evening by having what he called a discussion, and that he would discuss the various estimates. That was the impression that he left with me.

But I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the farmers of the province of Ontario are fed up with all these discussions. What they want is a little bit of action from the Tory government in Ottawa and the Tory government here in the city of Toronto.

For too many years we have listened to the hon. members opposite. Back in 1957, as a matter of fact, as I sat over here myself, they practically caused tears to run down my face when they told about what those terrible Grits, as a government, were doing in Ottawa at that time, to the farmers of Ontario, and indeed, to the farmers of the whole of Canada.

But, do hon. members know something? When I think about the tears that I shed in those days, why now I can hardly stop crying because of them, because these hon. members across have not kept one single promise.

When I think of the promises that were given by them by the various Ministers of Agriculture who think that they have the ability to discuss agriculture; when I think of how they said they were going to guarantee the farmers of the province of Ontario a fair share of the national income, a fair share of the personal income; how they were going to stop all the millions of dollars of foods that was imported from the United States of America; I weep all over again. Indeed, they were going to bring in marketing legislation to guarantee that surpluses would be done away with. They were going to sell this produce of ours overseas. But, Mr. Chairman, they have done one thing. They slipped 100 per cent., because they did not even keep one promise, not one that I can think of, as far as the agricultural people in this province are concerned.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Did people vote that way?

Mr. Whicher: Never mind, it is the next time that I am thinking about.

Hon. J. Root (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: Yes, I will permit one from the hon. Minister. Does he have a sensible one?

Hon. Mr. Root: Yes. I wonder if the hon. member would tell the House how the hog producers in Waterloo North voted in the last plebiscite.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that that has anything to do with it. I cannot be answering questions here all the time, I have about an hour-long speech to give.

What I would like to ask the hon. Minister from Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) is not how the hog producers in Waterloo North voted, I would like to ask how the hon. Minister from Wellington-Dufferin voted when the hog producers were up.

Mr. Chairman, I will continue after the recess.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, firstly, in getting started this evening, I wish to reiterate what I said this afternoon. There is only one reason why I wish to talk about these estimates at all, and that is because of the deplorable state in which the Tory government in Ottawa and the Tory government in Ontario have left the small farmers of the province of Ontario.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Right, right.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I assure you that I have no desire whatsoever to get involved in Bill No. 86. But, inasmuch as the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario (Mr. Frost) has talked about it for about an hour and a half this afternoon, and the leader of the CCF party (Mr. MacDonald) has brought it into the various statements that he has mentioned, why, of course, I have to do the same thing. I hesitate to do it because it brings nothing but sadness in my heart, as it brings sadness to all the farmers in this province.

Mr. Singer: Right.

Mr. Whicher: But before I do get into this very important bill—

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Why does he not deal with it as he sees it?

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Tell him he should—

Mr. Whicher: Would you like to go out and have another glass of water, there? You are a very good chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Proceed.

Mr. Whicher: Well listen, do not let the hon. member for York West interfere with me, because I do not want any lawyer from Toronto telling me how to run a farm. I can tell him that right now.

Mr. Rowntree: We might say the same thing about him, about some other things.

Mr. Whicher: I read an article about the hon. member, saying what a great man he was as chairman of some committee in this House.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): He is a great man, that's my boy.

Mr. Whicher: But the only thing is that somebody pulled a great big string, you know. The day that hon. member starts talking about agriculture is the day when many of us should leave this House, and just let him talk to himself, because nobody else will listen.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Well, he has been living here for a while. Tell us about what happened on the subway.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to deal with the hon. Prime Minister, because he is a very big problem. You know he is a problem that we can attend to, he said this afternoon, a problem that can be surmounted.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Right.

Mr. Whicher: As a matter of fact, this problem, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Janes: A point of order, Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. Whicher: I am not out of order at all, tell him to sit down.

Mr. Janes: A point of order.

Mr. Chairman: Oh, sit down. Let us get—

Mr. Whicher: I will look after the hon. member, along with the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Janes: A point of privilege then, personal privilege?

Mr. Chairman: Let the member state his privilege.

Mr. Janes: Personal privilege.

Mr. Chairman: On a point of order, or personal privilege?

Mr. Janes: Both.

Mr. Chairman: Please state it.

Mr. Janes: I want to offer my hon. friend from Bruce a wager.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): These are laws of Killaloe.

Mr. Janes: Come on, that is a personal privilege.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. I am sorry. Will the member please be seated.

Mr. Janes: The hog marketing problem will be present in 6 months after this bill is passed.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Will the member please take his seat? I would like to read a lecture to the members of the House. We all like a little bit of levity in both sides, but I am sorry that I will have to call you to order if you do not let the speaker continue with his address.

Mr. Singer: Right.

Mr. Whicher: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and what I wanted to impress on the House is that I am the speaker.

Mr. Chairman: You stay in line, too.

Mr. Whicher: I would be afraid that it would embarrass not me, but the Tory party, so please sit down.

Now, Mr. Chairman, do not let the hon. Prime Minister go away because I said he was a problem, because he is only one as far as I am concerned. So do not let him leave.

Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we were listening, for some length of time, to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) as he gave his original first speech before introducing the estimates to this House. As I mentioned before, he started off by saying that, instead of giving a speech about the estimates he proposed to bring to this House, he felt that it would be a very good thing for the hon. members of this House to listen to a so-called discussion. By that, I gathered that he meant that, during the various votes that we are about to bring forth tonight, if any of us had certain questions, we should stand up and ask them.

Now, what I wish to say is this. The farmers of the province of Ontario, and particularly the farmers of Bruce county whom I have the honour to represent, are sick and tired of the discussions of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. They are sick and tired of the discussions of the hon. Prime Minister. I would like to point this out to you, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I ask this—

Mr. Whicher: Well—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member realize that some of us are sick and tired of people being out of order perpetually?

Mr. Whicher: Well, I am not in the least bit out of order, sir, and the hon. Prime Minister can just sit down, because if Mr. Chairman said that I had the floor, then I am the speaker here.

Will the hon. Prime Minister—yes, what is he going to do? Turn to Mr. Chairman. I am not going to give in to the hon. Prime Minister, I will tell him that much.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, what has this got to do—

Mr. Whicher: Well, just sit down. I am not spoken out.

What I wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, is that the hon. Prime Minister in the last election, I do not know why it was—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: You just sit down, Mr. Chairman, you and the hon. Prime Minister just sit down. Kneel.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Now, once again, I would like to repeat that I would like the co-operation of the members on both sides of the House. I will ask the member for Bruce to try to confine his remarks to the estimates in question, and not vary too widely from the subject. I would ask the members on the other side of the House to please give attention and a little bit of order.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I want to bring this right now to your attention. I have not got the slightest intention of sitting down here tonight without putting the needle into the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario, the man who is responsible for the deplorable agricultural condition in this province, now there he goes. Now that is a very easy way to go. A very easy way to go.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Now, as far as the rest of the small fry are concerned, I am not even interested in them.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Dymond.

Mr. Whicher: Now, the hon. Minister of Health had better look after the health situation of the province. He has a big job there. As far as agriculture is concerned, he only knows one thing, and this is unparliamentary—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): It is feasible.

Mr. Whicher: Thank you. Well look, I think I am doing the talking around this place, and just because the hon. members opposite happen to outvote us by 71 to 22—

Mr. Chairman: Will you please get on with the estimates?

Mr. Whicher: I am on the estimates.

Mr. Chairman: You could have fooled me. Order.

Mr. Whicher: The point is this, Mr. Chairman, as I have said in this assembly before—something that seems to hit at every Tory in this province, every Tory who is sitting in this legislative assembly—as far as the farmers of this province of Ontario are concerned, Tory times are hard times.

Not only, I say to the hon. Minister of Health, not only are Tory times hard times now, but they have been hard times in the Bennett government, they were hard times in the Henry government and they are hard times in the Frost government.

An hon. member: Now, slow down—

Mr. Whicher: I am not going to slow down the least bit. Listen, there will have to be a whole lot more than 71 Tories in this House to slow me down.

Another hon. member: He looks pale.

Mr. Whicher: I am not the least bit pale.

This afternoon we heard the hon. Minister of Agriculture, in discussing his estimates, tell us that there was nothing wrong with the farmers of the province of Ontario. I wish to agree with the hon. Minister of Agriculture. There is nothing wrong with the farmers of the province of Ontario, what is wrong is with this government, that is what is wrong.

When I remember the stories that were given by the hon. Minister without Portfolio, who was not a Minister in those days, the hon. Minister from Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), as he stood up in this House in 1957, when he was trying to get that man who has done more to be against, unfortunately—I say this most unfortunately with sadness in my heart—when he tried to get this man, who is now the hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), to sit down there to help out the farmers of Ontario, and the farmers of Canada.

At that time, the hon. Minister exaggerated everything that it was humanly possible to exaggerate. He said that we were bringing millions of dollars' worth of food stuffs in from the United States, that we were importing lamb from New Zealand and from Australia. He said that we were bringing in lettuce and grapefruit and oranges from California. Yes, he said that the reason why the farmers in this province were not getting a fair deal was because we had a Liberal government in Ottawa.

Now, I ask him what about today?

Why is it that in 1957 we had pork worth 30 cents a pound to the farmers of this province, liveweight, and today it is worth something like 18 cents a pound, under this Tory government?

Mr. Chairman, is it not true, and I say this with all humility and with all honesty, is it not true to the rural Tory hon. members of this Legislature that, as far as the farmers of this province are concerned, Tory times are really hard times? They will see how far that broken record will go, it will go a long, long way.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we heard something that the hon. Minister of Agriculture was going to do, something that I mentioned, not only in the speech from the Throne, but in the later speech that I made. This was the fact that the only way we are going to help the farmers of this province, and the farmers of Canada, is by exporting and getting rid of the surplus products that we have in this province and in the whole of Canada.

The hon. Minister said—and it was surprising, because this is the first speech that I have ever heard him give this added exaggeration—he said that they are going to show a lot of the food products of Ontario in the Ontario House in London, and that they are going to have a big show case over there like they have in Loblaw's grocery or in the Dominion stores or IGA or whoever it may be.

My only question, Mr. Chairman, is this. How many products, from the province of Ontario, have we sold in London House? We have not sold any. We have not sold any. I tell him that. We have not sold one pound of butter or one pound of margarine or one blade of grass in spite of what the hon. Minister told us this afternoon.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: The only thing I can say is this, that Mr. Chairman might have a little difficulty controlling the hon. members on the other side here tonight, but he certainly will not have this trouble after the next election because there will not be so many of them.

I want to know this. We are not going to ride this thing out for 3 years. We are going to ride it right tonight. We have a real good horse to ride, you know. The horse that we are riding is simply this, that we are right and they are wrong.

An hon. member: He is wasting the time—

Mr. Whicher: Well, I must tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I have all sorts of time.

The hon. member: He is monopolizing it.

Mr. Whicher: No, no, but they have a monopoly on smart cracks, I might say that, but they are not very smart, they are just cracks.

One thing that I was asked by the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Wellington-Dufferin this afternoon was something about how the voters voted in Waterloo North in the last election. And one thing I would like to do, and that is to get an answer to the question I asked him.

I realize that he has gone away and hidden somewhere, but what I want to ask is this: How did he vote when the last hog vote was taken in the riding of Wellington-Dufferin? And I would like to ask the hon. Minister how he intends to vote in the next election because I want to tell him how I would vote if I had a vote.

I would vote for the hog association the way it stands now, because I feel that they have done an excellent job, curtailed only by the animosity of this government in trying to stick up for the packers in this province of Ontario.

One of the things with which I have been very much in agreement in the past number of years, is the fact that The Department of Agriculture has set up marketing agencies for various commodities. I believe there are about 18 agencies. I mean they have a bean board agency and they have a tobacco board agency and they have a hog board agency; anyway, the fact is that they sell various commodities.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: I am quite willing to accept advice where it is given in the proper form, that is about the first that I have heard, but I am certainly willing to take that advice.

The point is that we have various agencies that are set up to market the various agricultural commodities in this province. I am very much in favour of it.

I feel this is similar to the labour unions. The only way that labour got ahead—not only in Ontario or in Canada, but in the whole world, particularly the North American continent—is the fact that they were given the right to organize. Not only did they organize individually, but they organized collectively. When they got a 15 cents per hour increase from the Ford Motor Company or General Motors, they did not just get it for the one individual, they got it for all the labourers of the Ford Motor Company or General Motors or Westinghouse or whoever it might have been.

This is the way that it must be in the agricultural industry. And this is the only way that it is possible to develop the agricultural industry in this province and in Canada, by allowing such things as farm marketing organizations.

It would be very nice if The Department of Agriculture would back up this farm marketing organization the same way that The Department of Labour, under my very good friend, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), has in many respects backed the unions of the province of Ontario.

But unfortunately such is not the case. The similarity is simply this, that we have men who are working as so-called labour forces many of them very, very skilled and many of them making excellent livings, but we have this situation, that here we allow organization, backed to the hilt by the government.

On the other side we have the poor farmers of this province, organized if verbally only, by this government, and particularly by this hon. Minister of Agriculture—organized yes, verbally—but when they run into the least bit of trouble, he runs behind the wheels of big business, which has happened on many occasions.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): There are 16 marketing boards in this province who are doing an excellent job and we have given them full support.

Mr. Whicher: So be it. Thank heavens there happens to be two sides to every story. The important thing in this Bill No. 86 is that there is only one side, and we will get into that in just a minute.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say this. In the little town of Wiarton where I happen to live in Bruce county, we have a co-operative there that has been most successful.

This is the reason that I really am in favour of marketing organizations. About 5 years ago we started, in Wiarton, what was known as the Grey-Bruce co-operative cattle sale. Cattle were brought in from all the surrounding districts on any one particular day. As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Wellington-Dufferin—

An hon. member: Who organized the sale?

Mr. Whicher: Does the hon. member want to know who organized it? I organized the sale, along with other directors. There was no one else who organized it. I am sorry to have to tell him that.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I think it is only fair to say that some of the officials helped the hon. member and we paid 50 per cent. of the costs.

Mr. Whicher: I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is completely and absolutely wrong and has no foundation whatsoever to say that. Mr. Chairman, I am right and the hon. Minister is wrong.

I have just been waiting for something like this, because the hon. Minister has exaggerated this in his typical fashion.

This sale has cost us $25,000 to organize, in yards, in water, that we brought out from the town of Wiarton, in bringing in electricity and so forth.

And, Mr. Chairman, this hon. Minister of Agriculture has the nerve to stand up and tell me that they paid 50 per cent. I have the cheque, I signed the cheque—the hon. Minister gave us $1,000, that is what he gave us.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I am sorry, I am advised by my Deputy Minister it was $5,000.

Mr. Whicher: Well, I am advised—I wish to tell the hon. Minister of Agriculture that with all due respect—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I will check it.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Minister had better check it.

I wish to advise, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the hon. Minister will take my word for this—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I have asked him to check into it.

Mr. Whicher: Well, listen, I do not need to check into it because I endorsed the cheque. I signed the cheque. The cheque that the hon. Minister gave was for $1,000. And supposing it was $5,000—supposing it was $5,000, Mr. Chairman—the expenditure for this cattle sale was $25,000.

And this hon. Minister, in the fashion in which he is a professional, stands up in this House, before all the hon. members here—including the Tories—and tells us that he gave 50 per cent. towards the production of this sale.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Up to $5,000.

Mr. Whicher: Well, might I say this, Mr. Chairman, there is a considerable difference in that, and he did not give us $5,000, because I—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: They have done an excellent job up there, they are great people.

Mr. Whicher: They certainly are. I happen to be a director of the sale, and as far as that sale is concerned, the hon. Minister is nothing. But in any event, Mr. Chairman, what I wanted to say was this: That this cattle sale has been a resounding success, with or without the help of The Department of Agriculture.

It has been successful for this reason, that all of the cattle are brought into the cattle yards, and then we have several hundred buyers, and we have an auctioneer there who stands up and auctions off these cattle. We have many, many buyers who bid on these cattle, and they may start—just to use a figure—at 19 cents a pound. And they get up and up, and my point is this, that some buyer will give an extra cent or an extra cent and a half in order to get that particular load of cattle. With this I most wholeheartedly agree, because that extra price is given to the producers of cattle in the counties of Grey and Bruce, or from wherever those cattle may come, but most of them come from that particular area.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: With this, I most certainly agree, and this is one of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, why I agree with the marketing organization and the marketing associations of this province of ours, because when we have many buyers it stands to reason that some of them are willing to pay a little bit extra for any particular line of produce that may be sold by the farmers of this province.

However, Mr. Chairman, we have the marketing agencies of this province at the present time and these have been, and are now, under the authority of The Farm Products Marketing Act. And there are certain rumours floating around this province that this authority is to be changed, and that the authority is to be taken away from the farmer and placed under the authority of the farm products marketing board, or in other words, the government of this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that these rumours are not true. On many occasions, I have heard the hon. Minister of Agriculture and his predecessors speak to various organizations in this province, and indeed, in this House, and they said that they did not wish to interfere with the business of farming or the business of agriculture in this province, and that they thought that farmers should run their own business. With this I most heartily agree.

On many an occasion I have listened to the present hon. Minister, as he expounded these views in talking about agriculture in this legislative assembly, when he said that he does not wish to interfere—this government has no wish to interfere—with the farmer, the marketing of products—of any kind of product—in this province of Ontario.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is any hon. member who disagrees with what the hon. Minister said in years gone by. But unfortunately, we now have rumours that this authority is to be taken away from the farmer, and that these marketing boards that, in the past have been supported by this present hon. Minister of Agriculture, that the authority of these farm marketing boards is to be taken away from them, and that it is to be put under the authority of this government.

Rumour says this, Mr. Chairman, that the farm products marketing board is to take over all of the assets, or will have the authority to take over all the assets of any marketing agency.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Only if the agency fails, that is all.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is this, I am only telling hon. members what rumour says. I do not want to discuss Bill No. 86 because I realize that in discussing Bill No. 86 I would be completely out of order. I am only telling them what the farmers of this province believe, and rumour says that, under proposed legislation, this government will have the authority to take over all of the assets of any marketing agency in this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all of us here now, by the hon. Prime Minister's words this afternoon, when he talked about the hog marketing agency, we all, of course, know the people they are against, and the only way they can get them is by spiking them in the back and bringing in legislation that will not allow them to do certain things.

But, Mr. Chairman, by trying to get at the hog marketing board of this province, they are also spiking in the back every farm marketing agency in this province. There is no doubt whatsoever that, if rumour is correct, this government or this farm products marketing board will be able to take over at any time all the assets of any marketing agency in this province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out to you that these are not public funds at all. There is nothing public about them whatsoever. These are funds that are invested by the farmers of this province. These are farmers' funds. These are the same as if they were labour union funds.

Mr. Chairman, I ask you, how would the hon. Minister of Labour explain to this House that he could come around at any time and seize the assets of any labour union?

Mr. Chairman, this is what rumour says, this is certainly what rumour tells us, certainly by every farm agency in the province of Ontario. Every one of them believes that these rumours I am suggesting are correct.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, if these rumours are correct, that this would not be just a seizing of funds, this would be downright stealing, it would be downright robbery by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, by this government, this Tory government sitting over there.

What right have we, Mr. Chairman, to step into the treasury of any local union in this province of Ontario?

Mr. Chairman, I ask you, what right have we to step into the treasury of any local marketing agency of this province? Yet according to what rumour says, that is going to be the privilege of the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

That would be comparable to one of the people the hon. member for York South was talking about the other day, the white-collar people who go around stealing things and yet are within the law. But the hon. Minister of Agriculture, very fortunately, is within the law because all he has to do is change it, and that is what he is going to do in this particular Act that he is bringing up.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do not pay too much attention to rumour, you know, I never pay attention to rumour.

Mr. Whicher: Well, the hon. Minister brought the Act up today. I have read the Act and I know exactly what it says.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member make that charge outside?

Mr. Whicher: I have read the Act very thoroughly. I suggest the hon. Minister of Health go back to his Health Act, he knows more about it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Will the hon. member make that charge outside of this House?

Mr. Whicher: I certainly will make the charge outside of this House. I will make the charge outside of the House or inside of the House, either one or the other.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, do it, there is a place to do it.

Mr. Whicher: Does the hon. Minister of Health want me to make it once more, too? I say that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will be stealing funds from the farmers of this province if the new bill is enforced.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, that is hardly within the order of the House, to accuse an hon. Minister of stealing.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. Minister of Health sit down. I will stand up and say it. He may be a Scotsman but he is little—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Once again I am going to ask the members for their co-operation. I think perhaps the member for Bruce made a remark that was pointed towards the Minister of Agriculture, and if the Minister of Agriculture wishes to have him withdraw it, it is his privilege.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, I would not want the hon. member to withdraw it. He puts me in mind of a collie dog I had one time, and he—

Mr. Whicher: I would not withdraw it if the hon. Minister asked me to. I would not withdraw it, Mr. Chairman. I defy the hon. Minister to ask me to withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Let him go ahead. He is getting better all the time.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, the only reason that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will not ask me to withdraw it is that he knows perfectly well that I will not withdraw it, and he has not got enough Tories in this House to make me withdraw it, because it is the truth.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): That is a challenge to the chair.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, one of the rumours that I have heard in the past few days is that this particular bill, if it ever comes forth, will be able to freeze the funds of all marketing agencies of this province. In other words, this government will be able to stop any marketing agency from using their funds for any means that they consider fit.

Mr. Chairman, if the hog marketing board or the bean board or the tobacco board wish to give any grant to the federation of agriculture, or for that matter to the farmers' union, it would not be possible to do so.

One of the rumours that I hear is this, that the farm products marketing board, or in other words, the hon. Minister of Agriculture would be able to stop the issuing of bulletins from any particular farm marketing agency of this province. If the bean board or the tobacco board wish to send bulletins to their producers, telling them what was going on in their own particular Marketing Act, they would not be able to do it.

Mr. Chairman, most sincerely I say this to you. When we start controlling the press in this province, when we stop any particular group of agriculturists, whether it be tobacco growers or peach growers or potato growers or hog producers, then I suggest to you quite frankly that this is only one step away from the complete loss of freedom of the press.

Why should any government have the right to stop the hog marketing board or the bean growers of this province from publishing what they see fit to their own members? After all, these agencies are paying for it.

I suggest to hon. members that any government, no matter whether it be a Tory government in Toronto, or a Liberal government, or whoever it might be, when they stop an agency, from publishing what they see fit with their own money, then there is something wrong. I suggest this, Mr. Chairman, that it is only one step further to the complete subordination of the whole press in this province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, a long time ago we had a great American president—as a matter of fact, we have had many great American presidents, but one of them whom all of us know said the government was for the people, of the people, and by the people.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): That is not what he said, but it is close.

Mr. Whicher: All right, but the point is that it was going to be government by all the people. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. Minister of Agriculture would just go back to Abraham Lincoln and read what he really said, and he thinks of the desires and wishes, the democratic right that he is taking away from the farmers of this province, that perhaps he will change his mind and not bring this bill forward to second reading in this legislative assembly.

May I say this, Mr. Chairman, that in the last 50 years we have had many tough spots as farmers in this province of Ontario.

Just to go back a few years, I remember the so-called "hungry thirties." I am not going to complain about that. I am not going to tell hon. members that it happened to be R. B. Bennett who was in power in Ottawa; he did a pretty good job. I am not going to tell them that we had a man back here in the Ontario government by the name of George S. Henry. As a matter of fact, he had many good points, he was a fine man, he just did not know how to run this province, that was all.

But there have been many hard times for the agriculturalists, for the farmers of this province of Ontario, in the last 50 years.

But let me tell you this, Mr. Chairman, let us just carry on for another 50 years, and at the end of 50 years, if Bill No. 86 is passed in this House in the next week, the farmers who are living then will be able to look back to this date, whenever it might be, and say, in spite of the "hungry thirties," in spite of all the hard times that they have had, in spite of the low prices right now, they will say that this is their darkest hour because this is the time that freedom has been really taken away from them, and as soon as it is taken from them it may be taken from somebody else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are other things that I wish to say in the estimates, as many of my hon. colleagues do, but I will let you call now vote 101, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, in making a few remarks before the estimates, I want to make it quite clear to the House that I am not making those few remarks to simply be heard. I do so with a great bit of humility.

I think, as the hon. Minister has said this afternoon, in referring to Everett Biggs, that Everett is a bold man, that he made statements on his own because he figured that those statements should be made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might say that I feel similar to that at this particular time. I think there is a time and a place when certain things should be said. Far be it from me to offer any insinuations, but I would like to put a few facts before the House at this time if I might.

Now, we did hear a lot of discussion back and forth on both sides of the House, this evening and this afternoon, in regard to the position of the farmers in the province of Ontario today. I think that a lot of the remarks that were made, Mr. Chairman, did not lend very much to the debate itself. I think that the majority of people here will agree with me that they have not contributed very much to the welfare, the betterment of agriculture generally.

Now I hope, Mr. Chairman, that I will not be classified in that position. I am a farmer myself. I think that I know what the farm problem is at the moment, and also I think that if we have the farmers' problem at heart, then we will get right down to the business of doing something about the situation at the present time.

I am very much concerned with the state of our agriculture, and particularly the position that it finds itself in today, not only in the province of Ontario but in the Dominion of Canada.

One of the things that does bother me at this time, and it should bother the government as well, is the position we find ourselves in when comparing ourselves with the other industries and other businesses in Canada at the present time.

Looking through some of the papers not long ago, I did find an article, and it was in the Toronto Daily Star and I would like to refer a few items in it to the House at this particular time.

Under one of the headings, "How is Business?" it is quite interesting to note just how business has been in Canada during 1959, as compared to the income of the farmers in this province and in Canada in general.

Now, topping the list in "How is Business?" in 1959, is British-American Oil, with an estimate of $1.25 per share profit or $25.6 million. Up sharply from 1958, $1 per share net.

Now, if I go down the line, I notice the next is Aluminum Limited with an increased profit of 79 cents a share over a year ago, or $24 million.

Then if we continue on down, we will see electrical appliances, John Inglis Company earned $1.01 per share of $1.1 million profit for the past year. And this is almost 4 times more than the previous year. The previous year they had 28 cents a share profit as against $1.01 this last year.

Continuing a little further, we find New Brunswick Telephone profit up to 79 cents a share for 1959, from 64 cents a year ago.

Now, what is the situation, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the farm business in the province and in the Dominion generally today?

In this same article—and it is very interesting to read, and maybe it goes to the ridiculous but still and all it is something that we can take notice of, and probably give it a little thought.

In an earlier debate in the House, I believe the hon. member for Bruce did mention that eggs were 9 cents a dozen, and the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Wellington-Dufferin took objection to that and had different figures.

But in this same article, I just want to read hon. members a little here that will point up something that I am trying to bring to them. It may be a little ridiculous, but if you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read it:

This was Farmer C. Brocklehurst, a chicken grower in Alberta, who went to market the other day with 24 birds. Later he wished he had stayed in bed.

Here is what Brocklehurst put in his pocket from the sale of the fowl. Two birds, graded A, totalled 7 pounds, and at 8 cents a pound fetched 56 cents. Sixteen others, graded B, weighed 55 pounds, sold at 6 cents bringing $3.30. Two grade C's at 4 cents a pound brought 24 cents. Three culls and a bird that died during transport showed no sale, so the total take was $4.10.

Then Farmer Brocklehurst paid $2 for having the birds killed and $1.25 for expense, leaving his pocket jingling with only 85 cents in coins.

The 28 pounds of fowl would have made a good stew. "I should have thrown a banquet for my district instead of giving the birds away," Brocklehurst lamented.

Increasing numbers of western farmers are reported grumbling about low producer prices for fowl and eggs, the worst since the darkest days of the 1930's. Yet consumers are paying 3 times the price for eggs the farmers delivered to town last week, the farmers point out. Some officials of the poultry industry predict many producers will drop out of the market this spring and summer.

By September of this year, the price of eggs could leap as high as 80 cents a dozen in city stores. One Alberta farmer says he sells eggs for 9 cents a dozen to a jobber who sells them at 20 cents to the retail trade which put them on the retail counter at 27 cents. A jobber explains: "We have to grade the eggs, put them in cartons, absorb losses through breakages, we need 15 cents a dozen to cover our expenses whether egg prices are up in the sky or down in the dumps."

Now, Mr. Chairman, that does point up something, too, that I think we should take note of at this time. That is, regardless of what the farmer gets for his produce today, that the man who puts them on the counter is assured of his profits.

Now, we have heard quite a lot, Mr. Chairman, from time to time, from year to year, and especially during the time the Liberal party was in power in Ottawa. We heard it from the other side of the House here, that that federal government in Ottawa was driving us to tight money policies and what have you—into bankruptcy.

I want to say to hon. members in this House, this evening, that never in the history since the 1930's have the problems been as great as they are at the present time, as far as agriculture is concerned, and that is as it stands at the moment.

Now, there has been reference made to the bill that is going to be before the House within a few days. As the hon. Prime Minister has said, we have had quite a lot of discussion. In the farming industry across this province, we have spent some 20 to 25 years getting organized, getting set up the various marketing boards in this province, for the farmers to sell their produce and be in a better position to bargain.

We had in this country, before the last federal election, floor prices and guaranteed prices. I think that things ran along fairly smoothly for the people who were engaged in agriculture in this province, as well as in the whole Dominion of Canada.

But before that last federal election, the hon. Prime Minister of this province and his supporters went all out to get rid of the policies that we had in Ottawa, supporting Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker at the time, and the Conservatives in the federal election. I remember the words quite well which the hon. Prime Minister at that time used in saying that we would have to get rid of this man Harris, this tight money man, and that if we did not support the Diefenbaker government this time, the farmers of this province, were heading for ruin.

I want to say to the House at this particular time, as I said a little while ago, that we are facing a crisis that we never saw exist since the 1930's. We are seeing at the present time, Mr. Chairman, more and more farmers disappearing from the picture of Ontario. What are we doing about it?

Now, we were told that, in the last federal election and since then, that deficiency payments was the answer. Deficiency payments were going to look after the small producers in the Dominion of Canada and in this province of Ontario. Deficiency payments were going to do away with vertical integration and the big corporations that were getting into the farm business.

But I think just the contrary has happened, Mr. Chairman, because we do see that the small farmers—the egg producer and the hog producer—instead of staying in, are going out.

Last year we had one of the best prices for milk, for cheese milk, that existed at any time in the province of Ontario. But the situation is entirely changed. It was not the deficiency payments that contributed that large price, nor was it the federal government at Ottawa, but it was a condition that brought about the increase in cheese prices during the last year.

I remember quite well that, in September, I received for my own milk that goes into cheese, over $1 a pound butterfat. Since then, whenever I was home on the weekend,

I received my cheque, and it was down to 77 cents. And indications are, Mr. Chairman, that prices will go lower.

Now pork is the same way. I shipped some hogs myself last week, and I received, on the average, a little over 19 cents a pound.

Now, that is a very serious situation, Mr. Chairman. Whenever I compare the trend in business across the country during the last year, I can see that all prices of farm produce are going down in leaps and bounds.

The cost of the farmers' operations today is even more than it was a year ago, because if he goes out to buy a piece of machinery, he will find that it is up in price, which means he is going to pay more. We find that every other cost along the line is increasing, yet the net return to the farmer is decreasing.

I remember during the last provincial election, that this government kept saying how much they were going to do for the young farmers in this province. But right after, even before this session, they withdrew from the junior farmer loan business.

Now, how in the world are we going to encourage young men to take their place in the agricultural field, to carry on this very important agriculture in the province of Ontario, in the Dominion of Canada—which is so necessary to the economy of this country—if we do not give them some encouragement, some assistance in order to carry on?

It has been pointed out to me, Mr. Chairman, that the reason that this government pulled out of the junior farmer loans business was that it was a duplication of the one that was existing in Ottawa. I have had experience, Mr. Chairman, in trying to get loans for young farmers in Ottawa. I must say to hon. members that I am very much discouraged with the results that we are getting there. I think that this government should be in a position to help the junior farmers of this province, if we are going to encourage them to go into agriculture at this time.

We have to decide what course we are going to take, Mr. Chairman, and I think the time when we should decide that course is right now. Are we going to have corporations running the farms of this province today, or are we going to have the present farmers, who are occupying the farms do so? Are we going to have farmers become plain labourers, or are we going to try to continue the small family farm as we know it at the present time, and one that is playing a very important part in our economy?

I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is something of which we must take note.

Corporations are getting bigger all the time, they are shoving the smaller farmer off the farm. They are in a position to do so because they are in the feed business, they are in the processing business, and they can certainly have things their own way.

But I can see the day, in the not-too-distant future, when the consumer of this country is going to be in a very bad fix indeed. I say this because he is not going to buy the quality of foods he is buying today. He is not going to buy it at the price he is paying for it today, because it will be in the hands of big business. I think that this is something that is most important, and something that we should take note of, at this particular time.

Now, I do want to say also, Mr. Chairman, that if this situation continues, and if it develops as I see it might develop, in another 10 years we might have a very great shortage of food in this country.

It was quite interesting to note, when I picked up the Toronto Daily Star this evening, that the foreign indebtedness of Canada now stands at almost $15.5 billion. This is a triple increase in the last 7 years.

Now, I do not know, Mr. Chairman, very much about world trade. But I do know that, whenever we are getting into indebtedness in this country, and foreign indebtedness reaches $15.5 billion, then we are in great difficulty.

We have seen commissions of this province going out of the province into the American money market, borrowing money at a high rate of interest and having to pay them in American funds. If this indebtedness continues to build up, that can bring us into very serious circumstances.

Those are some of the remarks, Mr. Chairman, that I wanted to make before the estimates were dealt with this evening. I hope that the House will take particular note of it as something that we in the agriculture industry today should pay particular attention to, and by all means try to do something about.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in regard to agriculture in the province of Ontario. I am a farmer myself, and I am greatly concerned with the condition that agriculture is in in this province.

Looking over the estimates of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, we see 1.6 per cent. of the budget of this province devoted to agriculture in the province of Ontario. That is an indication, Mr. Chairman, that there is not too much concern on the part of the government towards agriculture. I think there can be a lot done, and I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture knows, as well as I know, the condition that agriculture is in. The cycle it is going through at the present time is changing from support price to deficiency payments.

Now I have not heard a word said by any of the hon. members on the government side against the deficiency payment. I think the deficiency payment is something which will drive the small farmer out of business. And I am one, Mr. Chairman, that is in favour of keeping the small farmer on the farm.

Mr. Chairman, too, I am greatly concerned about doing away with the junior farmers loan board in the province of Ontario. We have, on one hand, the province educating our young boys to become interested in agriculture, on the other hand this last year doing away with the junior farmers' loans, an indication that there is no future for agriculture. I think we should have another look at the junior farmers loan board, it did a wonderful lot of good for many junior farmers in my part of the riding. I was proud of it, it did not cost too much for this government to keep it going, and I think they should take another look at it.

Now, there are many other things I would like to say in regards to the marketing of our agricultural products. I think that we should get behind all these marketing boards; however, I feel that the government is on the side of the processor or the big interests in the province of Ontario. And I think that they should get on the side of the producer.

Now this Bill No. 86 has upset the farmers more than anything I know of. I believe there was a meeting of 600 farmers in the city of Toronto last week, threatening to march on this government, protesting the passing of Bill No. 86. I think that is a warning to the hon. Minister. I do not think that this bill should ever be brought up again in this House, and I hope the hon. Minister takes real notice of that sign.

Another thing that concerns me, Mr. Chairman, is the cancelling of all burley tobacco grown in the province of Ontario in 1960. That is a severe blow to my part of the province of Ontario. The indication is that there is too much surplus on hand. I am greatly concerned about it.

I do appreciate that the hon. Minister has set up a department in marketing, and assistant Deputy Minister of marketing in this province. I hope he will do something for the burley growers, to find a market outside this province so that the farmers in southwestern Ontario can grow this burley tobacco in 1960. There is not too much time to waste, and it is a severe blow. I feel many farmers will lose their farms if something is not done to find a market for the surplus burley tobacco.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I was greatly interested in listening to the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon, when he took credit for the success of the marketing of flue-cured tobacco by bale auction in the province. He only told one side of the story.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, I visited those warehouses in Tillsonburg, Delhi and Aylmer, and many days I saw truckload after truckload of flue-cured tobacco going back home. I want to inform the House that I saw the farmers, who had taken that tobacco back and forth a number of times, taking it outside and burning it the day that I was visiting one of those warehouses.

Now, the success of this flue-cured tobacco board in the province was not all rosy. It was the determination of the growers to make a success of it. I do give some credit to the hon. Prime Minister of this province, but I do believe the growers had their minds made up to make a success of it, and I think it is the way to market flue-cured tobacco in this province.

Now there are many other things I will say as the votes come along. But I would just like to draw to the attention of the government the fact we hope they take another look at agriculture, and take a stand on the side of the producers. If there ever was a time when we need all help, it is now, and it is on behalf of the producer of this province. It is a great test, and I ask the hon. Minister to support the farmers of this province.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): Mr. Chairman, as a hog producer, I feel I have a great personal interest in the hog marketing of this province. Naturally, I am keenly interested in the future hog business of the province.

I might also say that, in the great riding of Elgin which I have the opportunity to represent, tobacco growing is a very important form of our agricultural economy. Last year an hon. member of this House, a fine gentleman, and one for whom I have the greatest respect, delivered a speech which is recorded in Hansard of 1959 and I quote from page 562 of Hansard:

The flue-cured tobacco industry in the province of Ontario is an $85 million industry, and I would say that this industry is of great benefit to southwestern Ontario. I am greatly concerned over the flue-cured tobacco industry. Then let us take a look at the policy on flue-cured tobacco marketing. Here again the producers are pushed from pillar to post, from promise to promise, back and forth until the ultimate winner—if we do not wake up—will be the manufacturers. Somehow this government seems determined to break the tobacco producer and, if not to break him, then at least bend his will to the benefit of the tobacco buyer.

That view was taken by an hon. member of this House, and as I said before, a gentleman for whom I have a great deal of respect. If hon. members will look in Hansard on page 562, they will see who it was.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, any hon. member is obliged to tell the House from what he is quoting, and I should think he would have no hesitation—

Mr. Chairman: The member has given the page number and I rule it is quite in order.

Mr. McNeil: Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote from Saturday's issue of the St. Thomas Times Journal, March 11. The article, datelined Aylmer, March 11, is entitled:

TOBACCO GROWERS POST SOLD-OUT SIGNS

Flue-cured tobacco growers happily posted the sold-out sign Friday afternoon, completing the sale of the 145 million pound 1959 crop, at an all-time record average price slightly higher than 56 cents a pound.

This high average was up more than $80 million in growers' pockets. This is about the same as they received for the 1958 crop, which was nearly 30 million pounds larger. The 1958 crop of about 175 million pounds, the largest in the history of the industry, brought an average of 47.57 cents per pound.

Charles Heath, Ontario flue-cured tobacco growers marketing board secretary, said today that although exact figures were not available, he was confident that the average would work out to approximately 56.25 cents per pound. He felt farmers in general were happy with the results, and that the tobacco buyers were also well pleased with the quality of the 1959 crop.

Mr. Heath said he understood all tobacco had been stripped in time to make the final sales, including some 1.95 million pounds of tobacco suspected of having been treated with MH₃₀.

The treated tobacco was sold on the open market without benefit of minimum grade prices and averaged slightly more than 10 cents per pound less than the untreated tobacco.

Sale of the 1959 crop opened on November 24 last year, and took two months less time to sell than did the 1958 crop. The market did not close last year until May 8. With the exception of a brief slowdown early this year, sale of the 1959 crop progressed rapidly and smoothly from the opening day until yesterday when the sales were closed.

Sale of the crop has been the most successful and trouble-free from every standpoint since the Dutch auction system of selling was put into effect for the sale of the 1957 crop. Except for the slowdown period, daily sales through the exchanges have averaged better than two million pounds.

The only sad note attached to the closing of the market lies in the fact that between 500 and 600 employees who have worked in the exchanges, all winter, were released by the board on Friday.

Last year we, the government, were blamed by an hon. member of this House, for the depressed condition of the flue-cured tobacco industry. This year, with the average price being 8.5 cents higher I assume and expect that the hon. member of this House will rise and congratulate the government and the hon. Minister for the increase.

If this government is to be blamed for the decrease of prices of commodities in this province then it is just as logical to congratulate the government and the hon. Minister when the prices of the commodities go up.

Since 1943, this province has been blessed with the services of 3 great men as Ministers of Agriculture in this great province of Ontario. I refer to the late Thomas L. Kennedy, the late Fletcher Thomas, my immediate predecessor from the great riding of Elgin, and the present hon. Minister, a man who is a very practical farmer, who understands the problems of the little people of Ontario, who understands the problems of the primary producers of this province. I offer him and his department my heartiest congratulations on a job well done during the past year.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I will not be long and I am not a farmer, but one-third of my riding is comprised of rural built-up area. There is a question or two that I should like to direct to the hon. Minister, with respect to this marketing plan which has been discussed, if I might have your permission. And the question is this:

I understand there is a proposed fresh fruit growers marketing plan vote to be held on March 28, 1960. I should like to know how much notice was given to the growers in connection with this, and I wish to elaborate on it, if I might have the answer.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Chairman, I reply to the question. The farm products marketing board, of course, as hon. members know, has the administration of setting up of votes. I know the notice has gone out, but I would have to get the information from the farm products marketing board as to exactly when the notice went out, in connection with the vote.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the hon. Minister would have this information. I think that it is something that might well be looked into by him, because I had some people in to see me this afternoon, a delegation from my riding, who advised me that they received only 17 days' notice of this proposed vote.

It seems to me that the department might give some very close supervision to this, because I am very sure that none of us would like to think that we were elected to this assembly on only 17 days' notice, yet this is the situation which is taking place here.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, I might say to the hon. member that the local board sat in with the farm products marketing board and decided on the date, and arranged everything. It must have been satisfactory to the local board. Now whether they cut the time too short or not, I would not know. I agree that they should have plenty of time to give notice to the growers on the vote.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the point that I want to make is that this is just one more example where the government appears to be dominating these boards. And if it is to be a free vote, and if all of the people—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh no, they, the local board, sat right in with the farm products marketing board when they decided this. They set the date. The local board agrees to the date.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Then it is the duty of the government to give some supervision, in my opinion, to see that sufficient notice—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: —in order to make up their minds freely as to what they wish. I just bring that to the hon. Minister's attention at this time.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Now, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few comments on more or less, you might say, the plight of the farmer. I think that the farmer does need a certain amount of consideration in all of these things.

The first big thing he has to think of is the weather.

Well, whether he likes that or not, it can be awfully costly. In these days in farming, he is faced with tremendous costs of not only buildings, machinery, equipment, and so on, but he is faced with the fact that, after he has purchased this machinery, and equipment, then the end product which he has for sale is placed out at so low a figure that there is not a hope of even paying a portion of his operating costs, in any case.

The small farmer and the large farmer are all in the same boat. They have a farm, they try to raise their produce. If they are to exist, or subsist at all, they need at least one more job. In some cases, they need two. They need children to help them to get extra jobs as well.

If we are dealing with a large corporation or any business, it does not matter what it is, they say: "Well here, in order to operate this business, we must have my operating cost plus, we must be able to make a profit." But the government does not give the farmer this opportunity. He is not given an opportunity of making a profit, in the big majority of cases, at least.

Personally, I have never found it possible to do so. I have been operating a farm at a loss for 13 years, and every time I have produce which I feel should go to the market and be sold at a price which I would think would be reasonable, every time, that price is not available. It is generally a great deal below what I had hoped for.

Yet all the time, the government—and everyone else who is interested in buying the produce—are encouraging the farmer to get out and raise this produce. But the minute the farmers have raised it, then they find that they do not have the sale for it.

I think that it is one of these things that our government is going to have to face up to. It is going to have a real problem. It is going to have to get down and dig to find a really reasonable solution.

I certainly feel that it is the duty of all of us to look into this thing very, very carefully, because if we do not solve it, we just will not have the food that we need to subsist on.

The problem is this. We can grow a lot of food fast, yes, but unless we can do it at a reasonable profit, the farmer is not going to be able to keep on. He just cannot keep on producing at a loss. He just will not do it. And sooner or later he is definitely going to rebel.

Mr. Chairman: I have given a great deal of latitude on both sides of the House on the general remarks of the estimates. I have been particularly liberal, I think, with the members of the Opposition. I am going to ask at this time, that, as we continue with the estimates, the members stick as closely as possible to one of the items which is under the vote which is being called.

On vote 101:

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Chairman: State your privilege.

Mr. Spence: I had to leave the House for a couple of minutes, Mr. Chairman. I understand that the hon. member for Elgin, for whom I have a high respect, has made a statement that I should get up here and commend the government for what they have done for the flue-cured tobacco growers in the province. Am I right or am I wrong? And he did say that they have raised the price 8.5 cents this year. Now listen here, it was not hon. Leslie Frost who did it. It was Mr. Jack Frost that raised the price 8.5 cents per pound.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, regarding item No. 10, on the automobile insurance, this is the first time that I have seen this item. Could the hon. Minister explain what it is? Item No. 10 in vote 101.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Each branch previously paid their own share, which caused considerable amount of accounting. Now all the automobile insurance is brought into the one account.

Mr. Manley: Previously each branch of the department paid its own insurance?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, it has all been brought into one account.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, on vote 101, the general vote, there is this general reference in item No. 8 to the workmen's compensation board. Now, I appreciate what this means. But I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question with respect to workmen's compensation protection generally for the farmer in Ontario. I do not know under what other item I might properly bring it up. It has been mentioned in the House previously this session, and I understand it has been discussed before the committee on labour of which I do not happen to be a member.

I am very greatly concerned with this situation that is developing. If it came out, in the evidence before the committee on labour, that there are only 1,200 farmers left in the province of Ontario who are receiving protection under the workmen's compensation board, and the scheme that was started out a few years ago with so much hope that it would meet the requirements, and situation, then certainly it has been a dismal failure.

Now, frankly, in the last 4 years, I have not been responsible for the operations on my own farm. Previous to that, since 1913, I had the entire responsibility, and I never felt that I could take the chance of operating a farm, and employing a number of employees, without protection of some kind.

Farms have been fully mechanized for many years. There are no horses. Farmers depend entirely on tractors and the modern machinery that evidently can be so very dangerous.

So I always protected myself with legal liability, by insurance contracts. In that time, I had 4 or 5 more-or-less serious accidents, and never failed to get a satisfactory adjustment with the insurance company.

Now, since the farm operations have been under the protection of the workmen's compensation, our experience, frankly, has not been so satisfactory. Some of the other farmers must be cashing in on this protection, or the results could not be so disastrous to the board as they evidently are now.

And when, a year ago, we had a serious accident to an employee at harvest time, with damage to his back, the doctor immediately ordered him into the hospital, and he lay on a plank for 6 weeks. This was a very expensive experience for him and for us. But the workmen's compensation board weaseled out of any responsibility for it at all, although other injured employees of farms in the district were evidently able to qualify under the provisions of the protection.

Now, I will admit that the back cases are borderline cases in many instances, and it just depends on the decision of the board whether the farmer and the employee are going to receive the protection that we thought we were paying for. But certainly, in this instance, it did not work out that way.

So naturally, for that reason, we are not too enthusiastic about the protection we receive, although I have said, in other instances of an almost identical nature, the employee did receive the protection.

Then there is the cost which starts out, I think, with the very encouraging recommendations to farmers to come in. I believe it was 75 cents per $100 of wages, it is now I believe up to $3.50 and I understand that even that is not carrying itself. But, of course, if the number who are under the scheme got down to 1,200, then the situation is more or less hopeless. Moreover, the inspector comes into town, and he orders the farmer to come in with all his records and books, and so on, and it is almost comparable to having the income tax inspector move in on you.

And my hon. friend questioned this the other day, when the leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald) was speaking, but the inspector left no doubt in our minds, that he would rather have us out than in, as far as the workmen's compensation board was concerned in this case.

Now, I asked the hon. Minister last year, in the estimates, if he would give us some definite information on this question as to the status of the whole matter in the province, as to the exact number who were under the protection of the workmen's compensation board. I asked about the cost, and whether or not it was carrying itself.

I asked the hon. Minister to consider subsidizing this scheme of compensation for the farmers to some extent, to see if he could not get it off to a good start and get adequate numbers into the scheme so that it would be a practical, feasible proposition.

But, till the end of the session, I did not hear anything further from him.

Now it is certainly my opinion that, with respect to agriculture and the farmers in this province, some government has to come in, in a drastic way, to the direct support of agriculture. Some reference was made today to the fact that the Quebec government, for instance, is voting $5 million to assist the farmers this year in the purchase of fertilizer. If something is not done to assist in getting protection to carry the list of employees on the farm—my hon. friend from Lambton East was perfectly right, they are becoming almost a rarity—and if this situation continues, an employee on the farm will be as scarce as buffalo in this province. I think myself that this situation is becoming extremely serious.

The hon. Minister said just how many different years he had submitted estimates to this House. Well, I think this is the fortieth time, Mr. Chairman, that I have assisted in the consideration of estimates in this House, particularly the agricultural estimates. Frankly, I have never known a time when I was more disturbed over the general situation, as applied to agriculture and farmers, than at this time.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I might say to the hon. member for Brant that, as at the end of February, some 1,932 farmers carried under the general farming assessment, and 369 under what they call specialized farming. This is the same number as was enrolled last year. That is, there has been no reduction in the number of farmers who are carrying compensation. Farmers paid in $239,000 in premiums, and the accidents last year cost $203,000. The assessment is on the cost basis, as the hon. member knows, because he tells us he carries compensation at $3.50 per $100 payroll.

I might say that that is one of the reasons why this accident survey was undertaken in the province. It pointed out very clearly that there is need for some type of programme to educate the farm people as to the great risks that are involved in modern agriculture. I understand that this is the case, that the workmen's compensation board have been operating this year, below what the premiums were. I think the hon. Minister of Labour would agree with me that they have been running in the red up until this year.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the remaining deficit?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Labour would have that or not. But I do know that previously it had to be supported, it was not carrying itself.

I might say that we have had a number of meetings on this with the hon. Minister of Labour, the workmen's compensation board, and the committee of the federation of agriculture, to try to work out some compensation programme to cover farm people. Farming is perhaps one of the most hazardous occupations there is today. Compensation, as carried on the farm, Mr. Chairman, is different from what it is in the factory because, working in the factory, the workman is covered from the time he lands on the job until he leaves, whereas in farming they are employed 24 hours a day.

The farmer might go to the barn at night and have some accident. Also, compensation covers the members of the family, and I think that is another reason why the premiums have been so high, because of the extent of the risk involved and the long period of time involved.

But it seems to me that possibly, working with the federation of agriculture and working with the workmen's compensation board, some programme could be brought out maybe with a more limited coverage. Now that we have hospital insurance covering the people of the province, for instance, perhaps that is one of the things that could be deleted.

But I do know that the committee—the federation and our own department—are still working with the workmen's compensation board to work out some programme for compensation for farm people.

Mr. Whicher: I want to ask the hon. Minister, regarding those farmers covered, does that cover their families too, in every instance, or can they take it out on just themselves?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It covers the family. The wife and family are considered to be employed on the farm if an accident occurred.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, coming from an area in the province that is known as the Garden Gateway to Canada, and also as the member of the only urban riding in Essex county, my knowledge of agriculture is probably limited to the extent of the numerous backyard plots. As a result, I would like to ask questions about item No. 7, concerning grants.

Who decides as to who is to receive a grant and the amount of the grant? On what basis is a grant given? I have other questions that I would like to follow with, as soon as these are answered.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: They are considered with the various organizations. I might say that there is quite a list of grants as the hon. member will notice in the estimates here. These have been worked out over a period of years with the various organizations, what they feel they require and how much the department or government feels can be granted.

Mr. Newman: Is one basis the membership of the organization?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Not necessarily so. It would be probably the type of the work they are doing and the need they have for funds which they are perhaps unable to raise themselves.

Mr. Newman: Are any of these grants ever deleted?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Pardon?

Mr. Newman: Are these grants ever cut off in following years?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh yes.

Mr. Newman: Can the hon. Minister name several examples there?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, I understand the horse breeders are being deleted this year, and also the advanced registry board are not receiving the grants this year.

Mr. Newman: On what basis were the horse grants deleted this year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It was felt they did not require it this year.

Mr. Newman: Does the government itself feel that they should not receive the grant?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That was the consensus of opinion, yes.

Mr. Newman: Surely there are other rural organizations that are entitled to grants, or just as worthy, as a lot of these that are here. One of the things that does strike me as rather unusual—not that I begrudge any of the organizations the grant—we have just passed a $35,000—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: If the hon. member has any particular grant he does not think should be paid, and if he will support me on it, I am sure that together we will put up an argument and tell them we think they should be cut off.

Mr. Newman: Yes, I am thinking of all these various women's councils and women's institutes that could just as well stand some of these grants.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh well, we support the women's institutes in a big way, that is a great farm organization.

Mr. Newman: The various folk schools? How about the folk schools?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I think they are under The Department of Education, possibly.

Mr. Newman: One of the things that strikes me as being strange in there, we have a $40,000 grant for the Royal winter fair, rightly so, but only a $35,000 grant for physical fitness. The athletic branch is only $26,700, and this grant is one and a half times the amount that is donated, or given to, all of the athletics in the province of Ontario.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): In connection with item No. 8, workmen's compensation board, when the hon. member for Brant was speaking, it recalled to me an incident that took place about a year ago, when an employee of a farmer in the hon. member's riding came to him in connection with his compensation claim, and wished it reopened because he was suffering severely because of an injury that he had received on that farm.

The hon. member for Brant worked on that claim, and finally gave it up because the board would not reopen it, so the farmer and the employee came to see me. I did some work on it and also came down to Toronto to plead for this man on this particular case.

I was eventually told that they could not do anything about the claim and that the claim was closed.

So the farmer and his employee went to see the federal hon. member, who is of a different stripe politically than we are, and peculiar as it may seem, it was not very long before the case was reopened and this employee received compensation.

When I heard about that, I came to Toronto to get an answer, and the answer I received was that they took another look at it, and they found that the board had made a mistake.

Now the hon. member for Brant worked on this, I worked on this, and I have had considerable experience in working on compensation cases, and could not get anywhere. But they said they took another look at it. I just leave it with hon. members for what it is worth.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Could I have the name of the applicant?

Mr. Gordon: Oh, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, my comment is now a bit lost because I wanted to go back to what the hon. Minister said in his observations on the workmen's compensation.

I do not know where this disparity in figures came in, 1,200 or 1,300 that was intimated at the committee the other day and the 1,900 to 2,200 now. But, in any case, I think the hon. Minister will have to agree that even if it is 2,200, it is just as deplorable in terms of meeting the needs of all of the farmers in the province of Ontario.

Now, I was interested in the hon. Minister's comment that periodically he has sessions with the hon. Minister of Labour and the workmen's compensation board. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, if there is no other alternative to providing accident protection to farmers than this, that now is the time to sit down and try to work out some procedures for promoting workmen's compensation board coverage in a vigorous way among farmers.

The real reason for my getting up and repeating this is that, from the hon. Minister of Agriculture's point of view, we should latch onto this offer of co-operative insurance and not let the workmen's compensation board refuse to accept their offer to distribute literature.

In other words, if we are going to go ahead with this scheme, let us go ahead with it in a vigorous way, enlisting the help of all who want to co-operate in promoting it. On the other hand, if we are not going to go ahead with it, let us throw the thing out and get an alternative.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Item No. 7, Ontario farm forums.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Ontario farm forums are similar to the citizens forums, in that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has these forums across the country, and they have a happy marriage of government and voluntary organizations—that is the voluntary organizations are either citizens or farm groups participating on a voluntary basis.

Now, I know that the CBC and also The Department of Citizenship and Immigration of the federal government are giving grants to farm forums across Canada. I had worked a little bit with farm forums myself. I am just wondering what this $5,000 is, this item, in view particularly that farm forum audiences are declining rapidly, particularly in Ontario. I think also that Alberta has one of the lowest audiences. Could the hon. Minister explain what the $5,000 is for?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I think it is a very worthwhile programme. A number of years ago, I was a member of a farm radio forum in my own neighbourhood. I have been a little concerned with the fact that this type of adult education in rural Ontario is on the decline.

As a matter of fact, the grant to the Ontario farm radio forum was $3,000 up to last year. In the hope of giving a little added impetus, so to speak, we raised it to $5,000.

I would very much dislike seeing the farm radio forum disappear. I think it is a great means of adult education in rural Ontario. We raised the grant last year to see if we could not give them some additional support to keep this programme alive, and to encourage it and increase it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister is not giving the money for the programme itself because this is carried by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. What is he giving the money for?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, this goes to support the provincial offices.

Mr. Thompson: And what are the provincial offices doing? I mean, is the idea to have field men go out to encourage groups or—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I presume so. Actually it is all tied in.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister just gives a general grant for $5,000.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would care to explain his great generosity in connection with the Prince of Wales prize for $250. What is that for?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, that is for the Queen's guineas.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, there is a very curious thing in these estimates in The Department of Agriculture that I should like to direct an inquiry. Not being a graduate of the Macaulay school of mathematics, I just totalled up here the amount in these estimates that apparently is spent under the discretion of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I come to the total of $2,349,500. My inquiry is why is it necessary to leave this vast amount of money at the discretion of the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, they have always felt that a Minister of Agriculture, with his rural background, would use good discretion in the dispensation of funds.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am sure he would and I do not suggest for a moment that the hon. Minister of Agriculture would end up in Acapulco, Mexico, with it either. But nowhere else in the estimates do I see where that amount of money is left to the discretion of the Minister to spend, and I was just wondering why it is necessary to leave that amount of money in his hands, to spend.

Then in addition, strangely enough in the same estimate, there is the sum of $369,000 which is left in the discretion of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council.

Now, why do the people who prepare these estimates, the powers-that-be, leave some of the money to be spent in the discretion of the cabinet—$369,000? Why do they leave $2,349,500 to be spent at the hon. Minister's discretion? Does not the department know what it wants to spend this money for, so that it can be allocated?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It is an estimate of how much will be required to carry on the various services.

Vote 101 agreed to.

On vote 102:

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): On vote 102, item No. 7, Mr. Chairman—I do not know why you get in such an awful hurry. In item No. 7, the grants to the agriculture society have been reduced by $80,000 this year. Why have they been reduced by $80,000?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Where is that?

Mr. Innes: Vote 102, item No. 7, grants to agriculture societies and other—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, that is statutory, of course. Whatever is required will be paid by statute on a percentage basis, and that is all they must feel is required for this year.

Mr. Innes: Is there a limit on that percentage?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, yes, it is 25 per cent. This is a reduction on capital.

Mr. Innes: What percentage can they get on capital?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It is 25 per cent.

Mr. Innes: And the federal government contributes 25 per cent. There must be a limit.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh yes, $100,000 is the limit.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, concerning item No. 10, grants under The Community Centres Act, would the hon. Minister tell us how many grants there were last year in this connection?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There were 163 made last year.

Mr. Whicher: Is it 163?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There were 163 under The Community Centres Act.

Mr. Whicher: Of course, all of them would not be to the maximum of $5,000.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, not necessarily but $290,000 last year.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, when we were exchanging words there before, when we were talking about the grants—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Pretty one-sided, I thought.

Mr. Whicher: Well, I do not want to make it one-sided now. When the hon. Minister was suggesting about the grant that was given to the cattle sale in Wiarton, would that be under this grant here?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It would be under the livestock branch.

Mr. Whicher: Under the livestock branch. It would not be under community centres?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I understand that the livestock branch have made grants to all these livestock sales that have been set up at Thessalon, Little Current and other places.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, under that same item, how long is it since there has been a revision of the schedule of grants to community centres? It is $5,000, is it not? How long has that figure been in existence?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That was the original amount set when they were brought in, I think around 1949. It was designed to encourage municipalities or to assist them in the small places. Of course, the large places got into it too, but it was primarily designed as I recall, in Colonel Kennedy's day, to help the little rural communities to get community halls and skating rinks and so on.

Mr. Manley: Well, Chairman, just on that now, that schedule of grants was brought in back in the forties and it was $5,000.

Now, I think any of us who have done any repairs, or any building, in the past several years, know that $5,000 does not go very far. I think this is money that is pretty well spent. So when we contribute towards the community centre, I think that we should be a little bit more realistic. The sum of $5,000 might have meant something to those people back 20 or 25 years ago, but it just does not compare with building costs today.

I think that it has come to the time when the department should have a look at this, and I would say that the amount should at least be doubled to meet the present costs, or to be comparable to what they were in the days when they were set up in the first place.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Of course, I have found, and I am only giving two examples in my own county, that even with the $5,000—25 per cent. up to $5,000—there has not been any ice in two skating rinks for nearly 5 years now, after the municipality put up the debentures and so on. The grants did create quite an incentive to build, but I am not sure whether that in itself, created the incentive to build the two rinks I mentioned. But we have to be careful with grants that give too much encouragement to communities and municipalities. This is because sometimes, as in the cases I mentioned in my own riding, they built skating rinks they are not using.

Now I think 25 per cent. up to $5,000 is a big help. I am thinking of two townships in my own county that have built new township halls, community centres. It is a great help to them, they cost about $20,000 and they got their full grant of $5,000.

I think we have to leave these things up to the local people, to let them decide what they want.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on that same item, it seems a little incongruous to me that The Department of Agriculture should administer grants under The Community Centres Act, because after all, The Community Centres Act specifies that these grants are made to all municipalities—not just small rural municipalities—to all municipalities.

Does the hon. Minister think it would be more logical at this time to get all the things concerning municipal affairs into the one department? Would it not be logical now, to get grants to things that are primarily determined by municipal councils into The Department of Municipal Affairs, to get it out of The Department of Agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, that could be, of course. When The Community Centres Act was passed in 1949, there was no consideration given that it would be ever made available to these wealthy urban municipalities. It would only be for the poor downtrodden little townships that needed some help. But, unfortunately, the big rich municipalities cashed in, too.

Mr. Singer: They got their hands in the government's pocket.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: But this is really an agriculture matter here, to help the little people in rural Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: I would like to say something about this too, because I have had some experience in grants given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in connection with The Community Centres Act. On two occasions.

One thing that I think is very fair about the department is the fact that they give it not only on the money that is spent, but on the free labour and anything that is free in connection with it.

I am thinking about the ball park in the town of Wiarton. In that particular instance, we got a great deal of free fill from an airport that was being built there, and we charged that up at $1 a yard to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and he very kindly gave us 25 cents a yard refund.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): We have got to watch them more carefully.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I never thought he would do anything like that.

Mr. Whicher: I would like to thank him very much for that. I am glad it happened two or three years ago, and not next year, or we might not have received it.

Vote 102 agreed to.

On vote 103:

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, on vote 103, item No. 4, education extension and marketing research work, I notice that that item is down by the amount of $6,400. I think that we have had many hon. members in the House say how important marketing is, and I am wondering why that vote should be cut to the extent of $6,400. I would think it should be going the other way.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, yes, they are rearranging the work to reduce mileage travel, and discontinuing certain functions which have been carried out in the past, which may now be considered unnecessary.

This is just another part of the developing of greater efficiency in the department. It is not cutting down on the services. It is developing greater efficiency.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister on how many government boards the president of the Ontario federation of agriculture serves in this province, and how much does he receive?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I presume the hon. member is referring to Mr. Greer.

Mr. Spence: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: He receives $35 a day—he and Mr. Jones, who is the other member of the milk industry board, with Judge Currey.

Mr. Nixon: Well, he is also on the inquiry board committee.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That is right. He and the president of the farmers' union are both on the inquiry board.

Mr. Nixon: What do they get on that?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I think they get $50 a day on the inquiry board.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, my! Does my hon. friend have any knowledge as to whether or not he is on any federal board?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well now, I do not know.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister how many fines were levied by the milk industry board and how many, if any, licences were cancelled by the board last year.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do not think we have that information. I only know of the one down in Elgin county, this fellow—what is his name?

Mr. Innes: Does the hon. Minister mean to tell me that that was the only fine levied in the province?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, that is the only one I know of. I will get the information for the hon. member if there are more. We have not that information here.

Mr. Innes: Were there any fines levied against—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Verdun, as the hon. member remembers, the Verdun case. He was fined, but he appealed it.

Mr. Innes: I certainly do. It was very poorly handled.

Vote 103 agreed to.

On vote 104:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with vote 104, I would be interested in knowing what are the distinctions in work between the community programmes division of The Department of Education and the extension branch. I understand under the community programmes division of The Department of Education, they have field workers in the rural areas. They have an expert on square dancing who, I presume, works mostly with rural people. I wonder if there is not some conflict of interest between two extension workers, working for two different departments. Could there not be some amalgamation with respect to this and some saving of money for the taxpayers?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We co-operate with The Department of Education through our agricultural representative on this community work.

Mr. Thompson: But is there not some duplication? The Department of Agriculture has an agricultural representative, and both departments have a community programmes man. Well, what is the distinction in connection with work with rural—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The one is straight agriculture, the other is physical training.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister means to say that he is suggesting that the community programmes represent just physical training?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, no. It is covered, the whole field.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): It is recreation and adult education, really.

Mr. Thompson: Is the hon. Minister suggesting then that the agricultural representative never enters into the area of adult education or anything?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: They work very closely with each other.

Mr. Thompson: But I am suggesting that there is overlapping, if I could.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I will check on that, we do not want any overlapping.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Under vote 104, I notice this item No. 5 refers to northern Ontario.

There are some of us here who come from northern Ontario, and I am very glad to note that the hon. Prime Minister of this province was reported yesterday as criticizing the railway experts about freight rates. I am glad to know that, because we have an Ontario Northland Railway, and probably he will do something now about the freight rates of that railroad. He has an opportunity there to do something about them. He had for years.

In regard to my own particular area of northern Ontario we have one agricultural engineer to service all that section of northern Ontario including the Algoma district, Manitoulin, Nipissing, Temiskaming and the Cochranes, both south and north.

The hon. Minister very well knows, Mr. Chairman, that one of the great problems in our area is drainage. Certainly I think we need more than one agricultural engineer to service all that vast northland. I am glad to note, too, as he said in his speech today, that he was going to expand his programme in northern Ontario. I suggest then that the very first expansion be an increase in the staff of the agricultural engineers.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, on that same item, how much of that estimate was used last year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I find that the vote was completely exhausted. There was a slight Treasury board addition required to make up the balance.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask—with respect to the junior farmers work I should say that I have attended a couple of the conferences at Couchiching. Could I ask first, is this $120,000 connected with the Couchiching conference for junior farmers?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That would be part of it.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to offer one suggestion with respect to that conference.

I know that the hon. Minister has an interest with respect to the agricultural development of Indians. Yet I would suggest to him that never once has there been any young Canadian of Indian background at this very amazing conference, at which much is done to develop leadership with junior farmers. I think that there should be some strong focus in trying to encourage some young Indians to attend these.

The other point I would like to make is that I felt that, in these junior farmer conferences, there was a sort of isolation of young rural people in this leadership environment. I remember because I myself was more the person from the city and the only one who was helping in the leadership role there, and I would like to feel that, at some point, the department might take some prominent young people from YMCA's or Catholic youth groups to mingle in this leadership course, so that there would be an exchange of points of view between young farm people and young city people.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, I think that is a good idea. The only thing is that our farm young people are so far advanced that the urban people have an inferiority complex when they mix with them.

Mr. Thompson: Well, the hon. Minister might do some missionary work to help them.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture—and I am particularly interested in this sum of $212,000 which is available for northern Ontario—just what the procedure is to get the hon. Minister to apply this within a specific area, as a result of requests directed to him. This is another one of these that is in his discretion.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, but it is administered through the agricultural representatives, and through the assistant director of extension in our department that supervises this programme for grants and work of this type.

Mr. Sopha: Is any of it used in a specific area?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh yes, what riding—Algoma, no. In Sudbury last year, for instance, we spent $9,587.50 in clearing and breaking land.

Mr. Whicher: Nipissing?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Nipissing, $21,408.65.

Mr. Whicher: Good. St. Andrew?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I think there must have been a waste there in Nipissing. Nothing for York Centre, not a cent.

Mr. Sopha: I would like to inquire if any of it is used towards settlement in the great clay belt, the northern area which contains millions and millions of acres of arable land. How much of it was used?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, in the two Cochrans, about $45,000.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I asked because it is so utterly true that, being the inheritors of the northern half of a continent such as we are, that I must say that it is to our shame that we have never done anything about using those millions and millions of acres of good soil in the great clay belt and Cochrane and Temiskaming.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The hon. member had better talk to these farm members from old Ontario and see whether we should open up any more land with these farm surpluses we have today. I think that we have opened up altogether too much land.

Mr. Sopha: I just want to say this, and it is said in sincerity, and it is said in the spirit of friendliness to the hon. Minister. We might have done more in northern Ontario than we have done, and this government might have done more toward the settlement of people from other lands who are not so fortunate as we are, in having been born and raised in this province and the province of Quebec.

If we want to turn, for the purposes of comparison, which I understand has been done in this House before, the province of Quebec, under the aegis of the Roman Catholic Church, has done ever so much more toward the settlement of people in their northern area. Indeed, the Church has gone up there and has removed whole communities from the southern part of the province, and perhaps hon. members know as well as I do, that the Church in Quebec has brought a community from Quebec into Ontario, and has settled that community at Moonbeam.

But I say this to the hon. members and I have said it before on a public platform, that this government will never get people to settle up in that wilderness, fighting the climatology, as they have to do, unless it is done under the spirit of co-operation—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I am sorry. I did not catch that word.

Mr. Sopha: Climatology. That is a good word. It is better than some of the words that I hear coming from over there. That is a better word.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It was not a rural term, so I—

Mr. Sopha: I do not want to point my finger at the hon. Minister like the hon. member for York South does.

But as I was saying to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, through you, Mr. Chairman, this government ought to begin to do something with a little bit of imagination, and start making use of those millions of acres of arable land that there are in the northern part of this province.

Notwithstanding the question of agriculture surpluses or any of the other problems in economics of agriculture that we have, there are millions and millions of people on the continent of Europe and other places who are waiting for a place to settle. If the hon. Minister would get together with his brothers down in Ottawa and work out some plan, such as I told him the Church is doing in Quebec, he might make use of that agricultural land up there.

Mr. Whicher: Just to add to what the hon. member for Sudbury has said, may I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture—and if he does not know the answer perhaps the hon. Provincial Treasurer could give it to me—what happened to that $5 million that this government gave a couple of years ago to settle things up in Moosonee? Has it still got that $5 million or has it spent any of it?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hon. member for Bruce had magnifying glasses on at that time.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister about item No. 5, $212,000. The hon. Minister was asked a question, how much of that was spent, and he said all of it. Now, was it all spent up to the fiscal year 1959?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: From April 1, 1959 to February 29, 1960.

Mr. Thomas: In the public accounts for the fiscal year ending March 1959, regarding the same item of $212,000, there was spent only $159,000 and there is an unexpended amount of $52,159.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on vote 104 I would like to direct a question to the hon.

Minister about the country farm safety programme. I would like a little explanation concerning that. There is $40,000 in that. I wonder if that is for films or individuals to come out to train and so forth—literature, anything that could be connected with farm safety?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, that $45,000 which I explained earlier, is in connection with the farm safety council and the farm safety programme that we are working on with the farm people. It has been instituted in this province. That is an estimate of what it will take for the organization to carry this programme forward.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, did the hon. Minister pay that last year? Had he that same programme a year ago?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, it was in the big vote last year, in the main office vote. This year we have specifically put it in the extension branch.

Mr. Manley: And is it going to be a similar programme this coming year as it was last year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh yes. This is a big programme.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, did I understand the hon. Minister to mean, when he nodded his head, that he would have additional agricultural engineers in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, we send extra men up there from time to time, over and above the one fellow who is located there. Where is he located?

Mr. Troy: North Bay.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Thank you. I think we are going to move him up to New Liskeard in that new building we are putting up there.

Mr. Troy: Well, thanks very much.
Vote 104 agreed to.

On vote 105:

Mr. Manley: On item No. 4, there is a jump there from $8,800 in 1960 to $15,200 in 1961. Can the hon. Minister explain the increase in this vote?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Yes, this is a branch that is growing all the time. We have to give these farm organizations more assistance in farm management. There is a great interest in farm management growing in this province, and we want to encourage it in every way possible. That is the reason why we are setting aside more funds.

Mr. Manley: Where did that arrangement start?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, in no other place but in Bruce county.

Mr. Manley: Thank you.

Votes 105 to 109, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 110:

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. What are the duties going to be of his assistant Deputy Minister of marketing in this province?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, he will co-ordinate all the marketing in the department.

Mr. Spence: Will he assist the boards in trying to find markets for agricultural products?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That is right, and I think he has a big job of work to do.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to carry on with that question for just a minute. Where is the hon. Minister going to try to get these markets?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We are going to make an effort to expand outside markets.

Mr. Whicher: In what countries is he working?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I explained today, as a matter of fact, the marketing commissioner was overseas last year. He spent some time over there, relative to the possibility of promoting the sales of Ontario farm products in the British Isles.

Mr. Whicher: Well, what particular products did he promote and what did he sell?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, when he was over there, he did not sell, he is not a salesman. All we can do is promote, for actually it comes under federal jurisdiction and we do not want to make those fellows angry down there, by infringing on federal jurisdictions. On the other hand, I do feel that we have a greater diversity of farm products in Ontario than in any other province. We have products here that are not grown in any other province, and I think that we are quite justified in doing some promotional work on our own, in connection with Ontario farm products in the British Isles, now that the dollar restrictions have been lifted.

I am advised that, after the marketing commissioner returned, they felt that there was a market there to be developed in Ontario canned goods, for instance. And, of course, the hon. member knows cheese has been promoted, and all of these are premium products.

Hon. Mr. Allan: That is how the hon. member for Stormont got a pile of money for himself.

Mr. Whicher: I would like to say to the hon. Minister that I do not just feel that he has a right in his department to promote the sale of agricultural products in the United Kingdom or in anywhere else for that matter. I feel that he has an obligation.

The only way that we can help the agricultural people in the province of Ontario is to attempt to get rid of these surpluses.

And as I have said before, on numerous occasions, something definitely should be done when we consider the fact that tonight many people in the world are going to bed—not starving of course—but they are somewhat hungry. It seems to me that the hon. Minister of Agriculture for the province—while I realize that primarily it is a federal duty,—could co-operate with his friends in Ottawa, and attempt to get rid of these surpluses. That is the only answer. The only way the average farmer in the province of Ontario is going to be able to make a decent living, is if we can get rid of these surpluses we have. And as a matter of fact, it is not a great amount. I wish that the hon. Minister of Agriculture—not only in this province, but in other provinces, and indeed in the federal government—would talk more about salesmanship, the selling of surplus Canadian farm products to other markets of the world, particularly since we can sell only so much to the people of the province of Ontario.

As I have said before, myself certainly included, we eat too much now. But there are people in the world who do not have enough to eat. When we consider that there is only so much surplus, surely to goodness, with some of this high priced help that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has walking around these Parliament Buildings and in The Department of Agriculture of this province, and federally, surely to goodness, he can send them away to foreign fields and do a salesmanship job, the way the businessmen do, in trying to sell their products.

That is the answer to the farm situation in this province, and until we get rid of these surpluses, the average farmer in this province—and indeed right across Canada—is going to have a hard job to make a living. I am sure that the hon. Minister agrees with this.

I say most sincerely that these people are paid by this department, and that the hon. Minister has a couple of million dollars, that one hon. member mentioned, that is there to spend at his discretion. So I ask him to send these people to places where they need food, and get rid of these surplus agricultural products. If he does this, then he will go down, as the hon. member for Elgin said tonight, as one of the great Agriculture Ministers of this province. He has a great chance.

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have been very impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Bruce. But, Mr. Chairman, I wish he would get down to the ground, and get down to brass tacks. He talks about surpluses, how we are going to rid our country of them.

Does he stop to realize that he is talking out of both sides of his mouth all the time? Does he stop to realize that if we are going to get rid of surpluses, the first thing we have got to do is get our feet on the ground, and not price ourselves out of the markets of the world? How are we going to go about it?

Mr. MacDonald: That is a good question, now give us the answer.

Mr. W. E. Johnston: I will tell the hon. member how. We should put ourselves in gear, put our whole economy in gear, and bring ourselves down to a common level, for all occupations. We should put ourselves in the same category under the same high standard of living. We are only going to do that provided we first of all go into conference with all occupations in this country, not only in the province, but in the whole country, and bring ourselves down to a common level. This can only be done by conference between all groups.

My hon. friend from York South knows it, but he does not talk about it. That is the answer to this whole problem.

We would not have surplus in this country if we could export, but we cannot export because we have priced ourselves out of every market in the world, and we have priced ourselves out of it because of the unbalance that exists in our own economy—

Mr. MacDonald: What unbalance?

Mr. W. E. Johnston: —and the whole unbalance comes about by the unfairness of labour, my hon. friend.

Mr. MacDonald: I knew he was getting to this Tory answer.

Mr. W. E. Johnston: He is shouting across the House here every day.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Oh, the hon. member is talking about government policy.

Mr. W. E. Johnston: You bet I am talking government policy, and I am proud of it, but they are shouting across this floor every day, but they do not face up to it. They have never faced up to it.

An hon. member: We face up to it.

Mr. W. E. Johnston: They do not care about it.

I want hon. members to know that the very day that the people in the province of Ontario will sit around a common table and discuss the problems that we are faced with, and face up to it, then and only then, will we find the solution to the problem we are concerned with in agriculture, and not before.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the hon. member a question?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Please be seated. Will the member for Carleton please be seated for a moment?

Now, I stated a while ago that I had hoped that both sides of the House would adhere strictly to the items and the votes which we were discussing, and since I made that ruling, we have done pretty well. This is the first time that we have gotten a bit far afield.

Now, this particular vote is on the markets branch, and I am afraid that I am going to have to rule out of order any other discussion but that on the markets branch.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I certainly agree with you, and what I wanted to ask the hon. member from Carleton deals with marketing. He said—and I think very sensibly so—that there is a danger that we may price ourselves out of the markets of the world in many ways. Now, what I wanted to ask the hon. member is this: Does he feel that the farmers of the province of Ontario are getting such a high price that there is a danger that we are pricing ourselves out of the markets of the world?

Mr. W. E. Johnston: Not at all. That is not the argument I advanced at all, I say to my hon. friend. What I am saying is this. We are priced out of the market by virtue of the fact that we have no choice in the matter. The rest of the economy is out of gear, not agriculture. If we would pay more attention to that, than seeking higher prices for agriculture, then we would get some place. But we do not. We are all individualists. We have no concern about the overall economy at all. We are all individualists, including people in agriculture.

I have sat at enough agriculture meetings to know what I am talking about. The facts are these. I would not advocate, nor do I want, that any segment of this economy should take a lower rate of income, or a lower level of livelihood. But what I do say is this, that if we would sit down around a common table and work out our problems, we would get somewhere, particularly if living standards are on an equal basis. That is where we are wrong, and I cannot help but tell my hon. friend, until we do that, we will never reach a common solution to this problem.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Now, Mr. Chairman, on vote No. 110. I want to ask a question, I have been standing up for some time but you have never recognized me.

I may be out of order, I do not know, but I was just going to ask the hon. Minister this question, which seems to me to come under marketing because of the fact that I look at it from this viewpoint.

Today, industry is looking for other means of finding markets for their products, and is doing some research with regard to the other things that the people may be needing. I am wondering whether the agriculture department of the province has looked into the possibility of doing some research whereby we could use some of the products that we are producing in the province—in regard to grain, hogs, cattle and so forth.

I mean by this, today quite a bit of produce, in the way of frozen food, is coming to us from the United States. I am wondering whether there is research to be made by The Department of Agriculture in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Of course, we are always doing research work at Vineland on fruits and vegetables, and also at Guelph on various types of research projects for the utilization and storing of food and so on. I think there is quite a field there. There is no doubt about it. We are trying to do all we can on it. Maybe we should be doing more on it.

Mr. Belanger: Perhaps the hon. Minister could work closer with the industries in that category.

Vote 110 agreed to.

On vote 111:

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, on vote 111, may I ask the hon. Minister about this demonstration farm at New Liskeard? Could he tell us something about that? How many acres are there, for example?

It seems to me, if we are going to have a demonstration farm, that it should pay its way, and here we have a cost of $50,000 for this farm. Could the hon. Minister give us some information about it, please?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, I might say that we are making considerable improvements at New Liskeard at the present time. I visited New Liskeard a year ago last summer, and I was not too happy with the work that was being carried on there. I thought the place was a bit broken down. They were keeping a dairy herd and they were running in competition with the whole-milk producers in the area and it was decided, as a matter of policy, to go into beef.

I think there is a great future in the raising of beef in northern Ontario.

We sold the dairy herd at public auction, and we have gone into a beef herd there, and we are going to try to promote beef production in northern Ontario.

We fixed over the buildings and we have a programme there this winter wherein some $25,000 or $30,000 is being spent through The Department of Public Works to fix it up to adapt it to beef raising.

But I think that the New Liskeard farm has been a bit neglected in the past. I think we need that demonstration station up there, and I think it will do a great job for northeastern Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: May I ask the hon. Minister about the word "demonstration"? Does he bring in other farmers to look at this farm? I mean from where. I can think of some—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The whole area, they come in there.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Those millions of acres up there.

Mr. Whicher: I mean by that I can think of many farmers in my locality and the surrounding counties who are really very, very successful beef farmers. I am wondering perhaps if it might be advisable that the hon. Minister of Agriculture take some of the more unsuccessful farmers to see people who, in practice, are very successful, instead of running these farms himself. It seems to be quite a cost for one farm.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We have established in the northern districts what we call co-operator farms, where the agricultural representative works with young fellows who have lots of ambition and want to get ahead. We give them a certain amount of assistance. We have set up two co-operator farms in each district, where the owner himself actually carries out the work on the farm itself. I think it is more effective than having government farms.

My opinion of government farms is that the average farmer says, "Well, that is all right. The government has got lots of money, but I cannot do all these things." I think the most effective extension can be done right on a farmer's farm by helping him to do a better job.

Votes 111 to 115, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 116:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question on vote 116. Approximately how many home economists graduate from this Macdonald institute yearly?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There is a total of 218 enrolled at Macdonald institute this year. There are 40 in the diploma course and 53 in the first year, 51 in the second year, 35 in the third year and 39 in the fourth year, for a total of 218.

Votes 116 to 118, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 119:

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, in connection with vote 119, I notice that the amount is $190,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that this is very similar to the amount that we voted last year, $1,000 less. I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that it is $1,000 less.

Now, my point in very simple language is simply this. It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister has discontinued loans, and therefore I ask why he needs approximately the same amount of money that he required last year to man this particular department when no new loans will be extended?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We will, of necessity, require approximately the same staff for quite some time on the supervision of these loans. The saving, of course, will be for the most extent on the appraisal of farms.

I might say that I have been very pleased with this junior farmer loan programme, and it was with a great deal of hesitation that we decided to discontinue it. But there did not seem to be any purpose in carrying on a programme complementary to, or duplicating, what Ottawa was doing. But we are holding our staff together and I think we have a very capable staff, I think Eric Western has done a terrific job there.

The administration costs have been relatively low, and if the federal government programme gets bogged down with too much red tape, why we could start up this programme in a week's time by making money available for it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I have asked the hon. Minister how many loans are outstanding at the present time, and the total amount of the loans that are outstanding. Finally, I would like to know whether or not any loans are in arrears.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I have the up-to-date report here, as of March 4. The loans total $26,919,000 and there has been a repayment of $4,521,000. I am very pleased that, of the 3,600 due payments of 1959, only $1,621 is outstanding. There is $39,000 outstanding on the December payments.

So when we consider an investment of $27 million, I think that the board has done a good job in selecting the young farmers to whom they made these grants. The young farmers are doing a good job in the repayment of these loans. As I have said, I have been very pleased with this junior farmer loan operation.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, may I pursue this a little farther? Did I understand the hon. Minister to say that we require the same staff as we had just to administer this?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, we are spending the same amount of money, are we not?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No. We never spend a cent more than we have to. We put in $190,000 here, and it might be that we will not spend $90,000. But I can assure the hon. member that we farmers never waste a nickel.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt the hon. Minister's word on this, but I would like to be assured. Now, I know that, in his opinion, he is not going to waste any more money than he has to. But it seems to me that the biggest expense of running an organization like this is in the matter of placing loans. It seems to me that if there is only $26 million outstanding, that $195,000 is an extremely high figure to be set aside just to look after collection.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, the reason why it was left at $190,000, as I have explained very honestly to the House, is that in case the federal programme bogged down, we would be right back into it. I can assure the hon. member of that.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, if that be the case, it is my suggestion that the hon. Minister take another look at this, because I think if the department is keeping it just in case the federal department falls down, I submit that it is false economy, and it is a waste of the taxpayers' money. I think that—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh no, there is no waste, now hold on, if we only spend $90,000 of the $190,000, then we will have $100,000 left to our credit, and my colleague the hon. Provincial Treasurer—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: May I ask the hon. Minister if the appraisers—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The hon. member does not understand, we are rural fellows, we are—

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I know, but you see I happen to know a little bit about loans. And I would like to know if the appraisers that were maintained by the department are still on the staff.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: They were never on staff. They were on a per diem basis.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Were they independent appraisers, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That is right.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: There were none of them on staff?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, just on a per diem basis. They are very excellent fellows, too.

Mr. Innes: Mr. Chairman, I want to say what a good job this junior farmer loan board has done in the past, and it is certainly gratifying to know that there is such little money out.

But I do feel, because we have this excellent staff together—and I would ask the hon. Minister, personally if he has any thought in mind of using this staff to further a development bank of some description, or to continue to help the junior farmers of this province in some other form?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Of course, there would be a good deal of supervision on these loans.

Mr. Innes: Yes, I understand that.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: And they are the type of fellows and people who could be assimilated into other branches of the department at any time.

Mr. Innes: Has the hon. Minister's department given any thought to encouragement of the agricultural development bank?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh yes, we have given a great deal of consideration to that.

Mr. Innes: No, I am serious.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I know. But I think that really the federal government has sources of revenue that we cannot tap, and I think any programme like that should apply right across Canada from one coast to the other.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, might I ask one further question of the hon. Minister? I would like to know how many people are on staff in his department.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: In this particular branch?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Yes, in the Ontario junior farmer loan branch.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There are 28 altogether.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: And how many were on staff during the preceding year, the last year in which this department advanced loans?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I beg your pardon?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: How many were on staff last year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The same number. They have not been transferred. Oh, I am told they have already transferred two. We will be gradually transferring them to other branches of the department where the stenographers, and what have you, are needed.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well then, why is it necessary to have this amount of money appropriated if it is the intent of the department to—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: That is a very—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I point out to the hon. member that this is an organization which was created to take care of loans to junior farmers, and was established in 1952.

Now, the federal government has just come into the field. As a matter of fact, the first federal loans, I think, Mr. Chairman, are to be on April 1. Actually speaking, we are in a position of transition. Now, I think it would be a very great mistake to start a premature dismantling of that staff.

I would give to my hon. friend and the hon. members of this House the undertaking that every saving will be effected that is possible in this item. I think that at this time next year, or when the budget is brought down, there will be found to be quite a considerable saving in the item.

But the federal government does not get into the field until April 1, and we want to see their administration and their methods of carrying things out. In the meantime, we are making no further loans. We do not make loans at this time of the year anyway, and it is our purpose to vacate the field to the federal government.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out one more thing and then I will sit down.

It seems to me very peculiar that last year in the appropriations we had $159,000 for salary. Now, we are going out of the business, and this government asks us to approve $171,000 for salaries, an increase of some $12,000, and yet we appear to be going out of the farm loan business. It is very well to give us to understand that no money will be wasted, but I do not think it is unreasonable to suggest that this should be down instead of being up.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask in connection with junior farmer loans—I am sorry, was the hon. Minister going to answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No. We will take it under consideration.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now the point is this: Salaries were all increased as of October, and the increases in salaries would apply to these people who are kept on the list. That accounts for it. There is no mystery about it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, we have just been told that two of them have already been transferred and the hon. Prime Minister now says that they are being kept on the list and there is going to be an increase in salary.

Now, surely the government is not going to ask the hon. members of this House to vote these funds on this sort of weak excuse. I mean it is not a reason at all. No explanation has been given at all. We are going out of business, yet we are spending more money to collect back the money that is already out.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Might I explain that, because it is appropriated here that does not mean it is going to be spent. If these people are transferred to some other branch of the department, they still have to be paid their salaries so it will be taken out of this over into the other branch.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, this very well points out the reason why the statement has been made from this side of the House, many times, that there is a double set of books being kept somewhere.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question with respect to this junior farmer loan branch. I realize that there is this concern about the dwindling farm population. As I understand it, from the federal level there has been a selection of people, from Holland and other countries, who are coming into the country in order to go into farming. Does the junior farmer loan branch also extend to new citizens who want to borrow? One does not need to be a junior farmer? There is no level, then?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, no, that is a misnomer.

Vote 119 agreed to.

On vote 120:

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I noticed that the salaries for the Ontario telephone authority are $86,000. What staff is there on the authority?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There are 14 people. They give, for the most part, service to the independent telephone companies.

Mr. MacDonald: I assume they must do a fair amount of travel since we have $20,000.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: They are on call. They are behind all the time with requests from the little independent companies for assistance to engineering and different problems.

Mr. MacDonald: How many of these little companies are left?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Oh, about 300, I think.

Mr. MacDonald: How many dropped out of the picture in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: They are dropping out at the rate, I think, of 12 to 15 a year. That is dropping out or amalgamating, or what have you, with larger systems.

Mr. MacDonald: How many more were absorbed by the Bell Telephone Company in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I do not know. We have had some, I imagine it is about 8 a year. My own telephone system, as a matter of fact, sold out to Bell a month ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is late in the day, and I do not intend to get into a long discussion. But it seems to me we have a very strange situation here in which, out of the public purse, we are trying to do what we can for the remnants of the industry. We are just keeping them alive so that they can be gobbled up by Bell when Bell, in their own good time, think that any one of these companies is in the fit position to be picked off.

Now, it seems to me that it is highly unsatisfactory, and it leads me to a conclusion which I will not elaborate on tonight, but clearly here is another public utility that should be under public ownership.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: As a matter of fact, I know of a number of cases where the Bell have been very reluctant to take a company over, but they have a responsibility. They get all the long distance tolls, or a large percentage of it, and I know little companies that have had to approach the Bell several times in order to get them to take them over, and give their people services.

These little systems, with 100 or 200 subscribers, just cannot exist today. As a matter of fact, the Bell Telephone—

Mr. MacDonald: That is why they should be integrated into one system and the whole thing should be under public ownership. This is what we did in Hydro, but this government does not acknowledge the principle now. They cannot recognize it 50 years afterwards.

Last year, as a matter of fact, I recall there was one private bill in here, and we had the remarkable situation that this little company, in attempting to bring itself up to date, had sought to borrow enough money. They could not get the authority to borrow this money.

Then Bell comes along and buys them out, and raises the rates beyond what they were charging, to a level that would have made it very easy for them to finance the money they needed to modernize themselves. In other words, the whole situation is a completely irrational one. However, we will leave it for now.

Vote 120 agreed to.

On vote 121:

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, before we get into the matter of capital disbursements, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. In former years, we have had an item under his department dealing with rural hydro extension. Now, this year it is not there. It is going to be under The Department of Energy Resources, is that right?

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, on vote 121, is it tight money that has contributed to $300,000 cut-back in loans to co-ops this year?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No, it is based on the demands there were last year for loans.

Vote 121 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the debate on Bill No. 89, the parks bill, was practically completed the other day. I wonder if we could complete that item?

(second reading, continued)

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to cover what I had in mind in this particular regard.

In promoting the development of parks in this manner, we are encouraging the expense of assisting municipalities to develop areas, within or near their jurisdiction, which not only will encourage the government to spend a very considerable sum, but will make a further drain on the municipality which, in most instances, is now considerably in debt.

This may not be too serious. But, the fact remains that when money is available in this manner, the municipality has a tendency to overspend, as it knows that by doing so it is able to get more money from the government.

A number of bills similar to Bill No. 89 have already been enacted. This is just one more. It should not be justified on this account. I think we have already passed our limit in affording this type of legislation.

If there were some way of controlling these expenses, in subjecting them to the scrutiny of a responsible board which had the financial interests of the government at heart, we might reduce the costs of these ventures considerably. The Ontario parks integration board is interested only in the development of parks. Savings would tend to be of a secondary nature for consideration.

My just complaint to the government is that the more money which it spends in regard to schools, hospitals, colleges, and so forth, the greater credit the government assumes. This attitude is extremely costly, and is the main reason that our structures are so expensive to the degree that, if more care had been taken in considering costs and services, we would have made, for the expenditures, much more accommodation for education, health and welfare than we have at the present time.

Now, in connection with this, we always have done so, when it comes to The Department of Education, and the board of education, in the different communities. I would just like to read two or three small paragraphs from the local paper in my riding.

This type of thing, of course, is always coming up:

Why can't the board of education use plans of recently constructed schools over again, instead of spending thousands of dollars for architect fees?

The old question popped up at a finance committee meeting of city council Monday, when the board asked for a commitment from council for a new school to be built in the Green Acres area in 1961.

The school board wanted to build a school this year, but a hard-pressed council asked that existing facilities be made do for another year. The board agreed, but noted that the school would have to be an absolute necessity for 1961.

It goes on to explain that, regardless of that, they are going to have to set up for an architect and so on in the pursuing year.

But I feel that legislation of this type is extremely costly, and there must be some way, through purposes of education or what have you, to try to control legislation of this type. If we do not do so, of course, we are going to have to continue to have capital expenditures every year, which are over and above what the province can afford, and they will increase from year to year. As we have already noticed this year, we are going to have to raise, through capital expenditures an extra amount of approximately $225 million, I understand. Next year, what is it going to be?

I believe that it is just legislation of this type that develops the kind of spending we are forced to make, and make this the kind of a really unfortunate situation. A very rich province like ours should not be facing this situation.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I made some preliminary remarks. I am sorry—Mr. Speaker. On second reading, Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that one could speak more than once.

Mr. Speaker: No, not on second reading.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): The hon. member and I are both barred.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I wanted to reply, and unfortunately I am barred from the right to reply.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say something in regards to this, because I feel that to me this is the same thing as the winter works programme put on jointly by the federal and the provincial governments.

True, we are coming to the aid of the municipalities with regards to certain projects. But at the same time, we are putting the municipalities into a position where they have to expend money which they would not likely do. They would prefer that the government would come to their help. Suppose we say that they had existing parks, and they do have existing parks today, where they could do quite a bit of improvement.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): If we paid for everything, what would his hon. colleagues say?

Mr. Belanger: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If we were to pay the whole charge, what would the hon. member and his hon. colleagues say?

Mr. Belanger: Oh, do not pay any attention to him at all.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Belanger: I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that we want this government to pay the whole shot, we want them to come to the help of the municipality with no strings attached to it. This is what we have at the present time, because the municipalities have to come out and expend, in order to receive this.

Now, they have already expended quite a bit in the parks that they have. Why does this government not come to the assistance of the municipalities by telling them that we have a certain amount of money, if they want to do a certain project, this is some help that we are offering.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I would say that I am wholeheartedly in favour of the principle of this bill. I have not had time to go through it, section by section, but I am in favour of anything that will provide some encouragement to the people, who are interested in having park facilities in municipalities, to put some pressure on the city councils that have not recognized the need and benefit of parks.

In the city of Hamilton, we, at one time, had some good park facilities, in the north end, in the centre of the city and a potential in the old jockey club properties. I remember, when I was attempting to get a seat on the city council in 1951 and other years, I pursued what I thought was necessary in trying to promote the idea, that the jockey club grounds be used as a very fine park in the city of Hamilton.

There was some encouragement and some support, but it fell through, and it is now turned into a very elaborate shopping centre. The portion that was promised to be used as a park is now turned into apartment buildings site.

In the other sections of the town where we have had a park, it was chopped up into baseball grounds, trees were taken out, and wire fences put around it. We need baseball parks, I am sure, but still it did away with the type of park where people could go and sit down and enjoy the weather in the green belt.

I do think that this bill will do one thing in principle, it will allow those organizations that are in support of green belts and parks in the large cities to put some pressure where it belongs.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on this bill. I have had considerable to do with parks and I have had many inquiries from—

Hon. Mr. Frost: You sold us one at one time, didn't you?

Mr. Janes: I did, and I am very proud of it, too.

In our area we have a tremendous demand for parks. We have probably more tourists coming up to our area than in any other area in the province. The hon. Prime Minister just spoke about me putting over a park. I am very proud of that park. It is called the Pinery, and it is 4,200 acres. It was opened in the middle of last year and we have had 250,000 people in there.

Now, adjoining that we have a smaller park where we have plans made out to accommodate 200 units. Last year, and every weekend and holiday we have 600 units in the Pinery. And we had 100,000 people along the beach. I work on a river authority where we have been operating 6 parks, smaller parks—largest about 25 acres—and we cannot accommodate the people who want to use those parks.

Parks are the finest gifts we can offer to our people.

I have other municipalities who, unfortunately, are not in the position to get assistance on their parks. They have been coming to me asking how they could get assistance on parks. This will give them an opportunity to get 50 per cent. up to I believe it is $5,000 on a park. Well up to $50,000 then.

But our county has been asking for assistance with a park, and they have bought a park themselves to make it possible for people to get to the water.

My belief is that we should do everything we can to make it possible for every man to take his family to a park to get to the water, and that is one of the great problems we have.

It is not so bad for my hon. friend from Fort William, for he has so many lakes and so few people that they can always get to a lake, to get to the water. They cannot get to the water in our area, and I hope that—

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): How do they wash?

Mr. Janes: We, too, want more and more parks within reach of our people. The parks do not necessarily need to be at a lake, a park in a small municipality, and where we have river authorities they have been able to get this assistance. But we do not have river authorities in all municipalities, they cannot get assistance, and this would make it possible to do so. I think this is a very fine piece of legislation.

Mr. C. S. MacNaughton (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on this bill. It is long-awaited legislation in the rural areas of the province. We have heard 3 different viewpoints expressed from the Opposition benches now. The hon. member for Fort William says it will place too heavy a strain on the revenues of the province. The hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich believes that the province should take over the entire cost. The hon. member for Wentworth East contends that the government should put pressure on the municipalities.

But I can assure hon. members that there would be no pressure required in the rural areas, because they have been awaiting this legislation for some time.

Rural municipalities and counties, Mr. Speaker, do not have the same sources of revenue available to them, for the purpose of this bill, as is available in the city. I can assure them that in all the rural areas surrounding the riding I represent, this legislation is going to be welcomed and received with a great deal of enthusiasm.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): We are always well briefed, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to say that we do not have to have much briefing to see the peculiarities about this particular bill.

First of all when I came here as a new member a short time ago, I read carefully the principles enunciated by the Gordon committee which were lauded by this government. Well, I would say that this Act defies those principles on many grounds. The first is that one of the principles of the Gordon report was that there should be amalgamation of departments.

Now, to me and to my hon. friend from York Centre, there is considerable confusion with respect to just why this particular bill comes under The Department of Planning and Development.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did they get the confusion straightened away or not?

Mr. Thompson: And then not only were we confused, but I am quite sure the government was confused, because they have so many departments that are looking after parks.

There is another bill that has come up recently, The Provincial Parks Act, No. 72. Another bill for Presqu'ile provincial park, No. 73. Now where do they come under? They come under The Department of Lands and Forests.

We turn to another Public Parks Act, it comes under The Department of Municipal Affairs.

This whole situation seems to me to be unco-ordinated and confused. There should be at least some co-ordination to have parks at least under one department.

The question that we raise is that it seemed the policy for planning and development to be gradually and insiduously disintegrated. But suddenly this department is getting the new flush of vitality by having this particular Act put under it. Why is this? I ask because to us it seems to show both a disrespect of what was expressed in the Gordon report and what I think anyone would expect from good government. There should be co-ordination.

The other question that I would have is that I think the Act itself—and I am not a lawyer—seems to allow a great deal of latitude. In other words, I understand it is meant to be for rural areas, and yet within the Act itself it does not seem to be saying that. It covers also municipalities.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): He has not been briefed up there.

Mr. Thompson: Oh, I had a very good briefing.

I would say that I do not see any definition with respect for camping. I think this government could have spelled out more of the regulations about this Act, but it is just left under the favour of the hon. Minister to make the decisions on it.

We would like to see legislation that spells things out much more definitely, and which does not just leave things in this vague manner. I am sure my hon. friend from York Centre would say it is a discredit to any lawyer, and that means something.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, I must rise and correct the impression that the hon. member for Lambton East might have left unwittingly, and that was about the member for Port Arthur being opposed to this Act.

I cannot understand the hon. member for Fort William being opposed because I do not think there is anything that brings more delight to our people than Sibley Park, Shuniah Park and Kakabeka Falls to name 3 of the most beautiful parks. Then there is Quetico. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden) will tell hon. members about that, it is one of the greatest things this government has ever done for our people in northern Ontario. They are all delighted with it.

The hon. member for Dovercourt mentioned confusion. Well, if there is any confusion, it certainly is delightful confusion for the people of northern Ontario. This is just another facet of the many great things that this government does through the years for the people of this province.

I am sure that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and hon. leader of the second opposition (Mr. MacDonald) must agree with me. It is one of the things that the people certainly like to see—beautiful parks where their families can go and swim and enjoy themselves out in the sun at no cost whatever.

If they had more parks down east where the years have gone by and brought tremendous population increases they would be better off. People cannot get park sites around Toronto for 100 miles or more.

And we have taken steps to provide free parks in the north. I am talking about parks where we can get on a beach and we can enjoy it. Believe me, it has been a great thing for northern Ontario, and we are all for it so I for one want it recorded in Hansard that I am not in any way opposed, as I certainly am not.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege on that. There was no comment in anything I said that I was against parks.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, he said he was against this bill—

Mr. Chapple: All right, that is fine. The Department of Lands and Forests should look after it, and there is no argument about that. I know a lot about parks, too.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Why, his family did more for parks in that area than the government is doing right now. That is right, the biggest park in the area.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Send them over to see us.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would say that tomorrow the House will be in its various committees, and therefore, we do not meet again until Thursday at 2 o'clock. I have already given the programme for that day.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 of the clock, p.m.
